THE BLACK LIST

In the past few years, Indigenous filmmakers have broken through to achieve both critical and commercial success, with Rachel Perkins' Bran Nue Dae taking more than $7 million at the Australian box office, Warwick Thornton winning the Cannes Camera d'Or for Samson & Delilah, and multiple awards for programs such as First Australians and The Circuit.

The Black List celebrates these contemporary screen storytellers and those that have gone before, providing descriptive listings of drama and documentary titles where Indigenous Australians have been credited in the key creative roles of producer, director, writer or director of photography (DOP).

The catalogue aims to be as comprehensive as possible within the time periods covered for each format:

- features and telemovies since 1970
- TV drama mini-series since 1980, and series since 1988
- documentaries since 1980
- short films since 1988.

Basing the selection on the filmmakers, rather than the content of the film or program, means some titles you might have expected to find in a list of 'Indigenous films' are not included – projects where Indigenous Australians are strongly represented in front of, rather than behind, the camera, such as Rabbit-Proof Fence or Ten Canoes.

However, focusing on the vision behind the camera reveals how far the Indigenous filmmaking sector has come.

There were no feature films made in the 1970s with an Indigenous Australian in a key creative role, and only one TV drama title. More than 20 years later, the first decade of the 2000s has seen Indigenous filmmakers contribute to nine features and 16 TV dramas. Similar growth has occurred in documentaries, with Indigenous credits on 275 titles since 2000, compared to 25 titles in the 1980s. The statistics on pages 12–13 tell a fuller story.

Decades of work by many individuals and organisations are behind the wealth of talent listed in this book – from Indigenous media associations such as CAAMA and Goolarri Media, to federal funding agencies the AFC, Film Australia, FFC and now Screen Australia, state and territory screen agencies, the ABC and SBS, and institutions such as AIATSIS and AFTRS.

Key steps along the way are set out in the chronology starting on page 5.

As a major supporter of Indigenous projects and practitioners, Screen Australia has compiled The Black List to expand the reference information available on Indigenous filmmaking in Australia and assist in promoting the development of this vibrant sector of the Australian screen industry.

The catalogue will continue to grow through Screen Australia's online database at www.screenaustralia.gov.au/films, and your feedback is welcome.

Scope

The Black List covers projects completed up to 1 May 2010, from 1970 for features and telemovies, 1980 for documentaries and TV drama mini-series, and 1988 for shorts and TV drama series. Earlier projects have been included where information could be identified and verified.

The catalogue includes drama and documentary titles only, based on definitions used by the Australian Communications and Media Authority, ie excluding magazine, light entertainment, current affairs and corporate and/or training programs.

Multiple series of the same title have been included under a single listing, with series numbers noted. Credits have thus been combined, and may not apply to all series.

'Year' refers to the year the title was completed.

Indigenous Australians (based on those who have publicly identified themselves as Indigenous) in the roles of producer, director, writer or director of photography are credited in italics in each title listing. Titles which credit a whole community or group in one of the key roles have not been included in this edition.

International sales agents and Australian DVD distributors are listed where known. Not all titles in this catalogue are readily available for personal viewing. Try the DVD distributor where listed, or check Screen Australia's Find a Copy FAQ, available at www.screenaustralia.gov.au/australian_productions/Find_a_Film/Find_a_copy.asp

Sources

The research has drawn on extensive sources, and filmmakers were contacted wherever possible to confirm details and add new titles. Screen Australia welcomes updates and further additions to incorporate into its databases.

The primary source for identifying Indigenous filmmakers was the Black Book (www.theblackbook.com.au). Other sources for identifying filmmakers and titles include websites, online directories and staff of the ABC, AIATSIS, Blackout, CAAMA, Film Australia (now Screen Australia), Marcom, MetroScreen, NFSA, Ngaanyatjarra Media, Ronin, SBS, the state and federal film funding agencies and Screen Australia's production database.

Also publications including Australian Film 1900–1977 (Pike and Cooper), Australian Film 1978–1992 (Scott Murray), Dreaming in Motion (AFC), Indigenous Voice (AFTRS publication and online library catalogue) and Kicking Down the Doors: a History of Australian Indigenous Filmmakers 1968–1993 (Brian Syron).

Screen Australia is grateful for the cooperation of the many individuals and organisations who provided information on their productions.

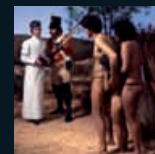

CHRONOLOGY OF INDIGENOUS FILM & TV

A SELECTION OF SIGNIFICANT FILM AND TV PROJECTS AND KEY EVENTS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF INDIGENOUS FILMMAKING FROM 1970 TO EARLY 2010.

1972	National Black Theatre in Sydney	Run by a group of Aboriginal people in Redfern. Holds workshops in dancing, writing, theatre and photography. Many involved were forerunners of the Indigenous film industry and went on to become household names in the Aboriginal community for their work in the Australian theatre and film industries.
	Early Indigenous filmmakers	Mavis Ashley and Trevor Ashley , Indigenous Australians from Roper River, study film production as trainees with Cecil Holmes. They come to Sydney to learn camera, editing and other production techniques, go on to do some work with the ABC in Darwin and later train at the University of Western Australia.
	Blackfire (documentary)	Student film made by Bruce McGuinness and Martin Bartfeld at Monash University, focusing on urban Indigenous communities in Melbourne. The first film known to have been made by an Indigenous Australian.
1973	Basically Black , first TV show with an all-Aboriginal cast	ABC-TV broadcasts a version of the stage production that had been so successful at Sydney's Nimrod Theatre the previous year.
1976	AIAS introduces warnings to alert Indigenous audiences to sensitive content	The Australian Institute of Aboriginal Studies (AIAS), at this time the major producer of films about Indigenous Australians, places warning messages at the beginning of each of its films to alert Indigenous audiences to potential sensitive content, especially relating to the possibility that deceased people may appear in the film. This practice is later taken up by Film Australia, the ABC, SBS and others.
1977	The Cake Man (telemovie)	ABC-TV screens Robert Merritt's adaptation of his highly successful play The Cake Man in 1977, making it the first telemovie written by an Aboriginal writer. The production owed much to the pioneering actors Justine Saunders and Brian Syron .
	Backroads (short feature)	Gary Foley co-stars and plays a leading role in the development and production of this low-budget short feature directed by Phillip Noyce.

1978	My Survival as an Aboriginal (documentary)	Essie Coffey collaborates with filmmaker Martha Ansara on this key documentary, one of the first films where Aboriginal people had a determining role in how they and their community were represented. Wins First Prize, Documentary Section, Sydney Film Festival 1979, and Cinéma du Réel, Paris 1980, and screens at prestigious film festivals around the world.
1979	AIAS begins traineeships in audiovisual media	First full-time Indigenous traineeships in film/video production and other media fields are offered at the Australian Institute of Aboriginal Studies (now AIATSIS). This program lasts until 1994 when Indigenous media training becomes more readily available at AFTRS.
1980	CAAMA (Central Australian Aboriginal Media Association) established in Alice Springs	Initially operating as a radio station, CAAMA moves into video and TV in 1984 and later into commercial television production with the commencement of Imparja Television in 1988. CAAMA's mandate is to promote Aboriginal culture, language, dance and music while generating economic benefits in the form of training, employment and income generation. Involved in numerous drama and documentary projects. Many other media associations follow over subsequent years.
1981	It's a Long Road Back (short film)	Made by Coral Edwards , an early AIAS film trainee, with sound recordist Wayne Barker , on professional Super-8, about her search for her mother after her removal to the Cootamundra Girls Home. The film leads to the beginning of Link-Up, which was founded by Coral and Peter Read. Link-up's pioneer beginnings were then filmed in David MacDougall's Link Up Diary . This focus on Coral's work leads eventually to the Stolen Generations stories being heard.
1982	NAIBA (National Aboriginal & Islander Broadcasting Association) established	Advocacy group established to support Indigenous video, television and radio broadcasting. Replaced by NIMAA (National Indigenous Media Association of Australia) in 1992, and then by the Australian Indigenous Communications Association (AICA) in 2003.
1983	Lousy Little Sixpence (documentary)	Produced by Gerry Bostock and directed by Alec Morgan, with Lester Bostock as associate producer, this influential documentary screened at festivals around the world from Athens to Montreal. Winner, Sydney Film Critics' Circle award Best First Feature 1984, Silver Medal American Film Festival 1984, Gold Plaque Chicago, Silver Award Philadelphia.
	Ernabella Video Television (EVTV) starts at Pukatja (PY Media from 1987)	EVTV starts making programs in Indigenous languages for local consumption. Most spectacular success is Seven Sisters Dreaming . Pitjantjatjara Yankunytjatjara Media (PY Media) is incorporated in 1987 as the regional body to help communities develop their own community media centres.

1985	Aussat launched	With the launch of Australia's first domestic satellite, many remote Indigenous communities gain access to telecommunications, broadcast television and radio for the first time.
	Warrpiri Media Association	Warrpiri Media begins transmissions in March 1985. Later known as PAW Media Communications, it is one of the first community organisations to develop and facilitate video production in remote Aboriginal communities, along with PY Media.
1986	Short Changed (feature)	Co-written by Robert Merritt (with Ken Quinnell), making him the first Indigenous Australian credited as a screenwriter of a theatrically released feature film.
1987	ABC's Indigenous Programs Unit established	The Indigenous Programs Unit (IPU) is formed within the newly created TV Documentary Department by the ABC in 1987/88, to initiate and supervise the making and purchasing of programs on Aboriginal issues. Brian Syron appointed as Producer.
	BRACS (Broadcasting for Remote Aboriginal Communities Scheme) introduced	Established on the recommendation of a federal government inquiry into the media needs of Aboriginal communities, Out of the Silent Land (1984); a small-scale, community-based broadcasting system designed to transmit over short distances. Enables communities to produce their own video and radio programs and re-broadcast or 'embed' this material in mainstream programming by turning off main signals and transmitting their own programs locally. BRACS is coordinated through the growing number of media organisations serving remote communities, such as Warrpiri Media and PY Media, known as Remote Indigenous Media Organisations (RIMOs). In 2001, IRCA (Indigenous Remote Communications Association) becomes the peak body and resource agency for RIMOs, currently representing over 150 communities that broadcast television and radio Australia-wide. Indigenous Community Television (ICTV), established in 2001, draws on programs from the RIMOs.
1988	Imparja Television (established in 1986) starts broadcasting	CAAMA takes on operation of the new Remote Commercial Television Service (RCTS) delivered via Aussat to cover the central Australian continental 'footprint' and establishes Imparja Television with a Board made up of representatives from Aboriginal Land Councils. This then becomes the first commercial TV network to be owned and operated by Indigenous people anywhere in the world. Imparja featured a long-running program, Nganampa Anwernekenhe , in the major Indigenous languages of the Centre.
1989	Weekly magazine programs First in Line on SBS-TV and Blackout on ABC-TV	The forerunners of similar programs on SBS-TV such as ICAM and Living Black , and Message Stick on ABC-TV.

Notes:

Includes Australian productions and productions with overseas partners where creative control is shared (ie with a mix of Australians in key creative positions).

Key roles are defined as producer, director, writer, director of photography (DOP).

1. Number of titles with Indigenous filmmakers in key crew roles. Each title counted only once regardless of the number of Indigenous key credits.

2. Number of individuals who held that particular key crew role. Each individual counted only once per time period, even if they worked on multiple titles.

The growth in Indigenous filmmaking is evident when numbers of titles and numbers of filmmakers with key credits are analysed by decade.

As table 1 shows, 16 features have been made since 1970 with an Indigenous Australian as director, producer, writer or DOP. Nine of these films were produced since 2000, compared to five in the 90s, two in the 80s, and none at all in the 70s.

In terms of number of filmmakers (table 2), 14 individuals have worked on the 16 features made since 1970; eight credits have been as director, eight as writer, four as producer and four as DOP. Clearly, many of these are the same individuals credited in different roles, and a person may also be represented in the figures for more than one decade, so the rows and columns don't add up in this table. But the growth over time is clear.

Similarly, 32 Indigenous filmmakers have held key creative roles on 23 TV drama programs since 1980. Of these 23 titles, 17 were made in the last decade, compared to six in the 90s and none in the 80s.

Even more spectacular growth has occurred in documentaries, with 101 Indigenous filmmakers taking key roles on 281 documentaries since 2000, compared to 26 filmmakers on 24 titles in the 1980s.

BEDEVIL is a trilogy of ghost stories that follows characters pestered by visions - real, remembered and imagined. These contemporary tales travel from the sparseness of the outback, through the murky, rotting swamps of the islands, to the Brisbane docks in a stylish vision from writer/director Tracey Moffatt.

Lena is a fair-skinned teenage girl with a dark-skinned mother in an isolated town. She rejects the Indigenous family which surrounds her and longs for the love of her Irish father. Vaughn, a dark-skinned teenage boy lives in an isolated prison camp. He is angry at the white world that surrounds him and lashes out when provoked. Incarceration has made him old before his time and has separated him from the love of his family. These two hardened young souls escape from their worlds and hitchhike together towards Sydney in a struggle for purpose, identity and love.

Set against the decaying grandeur of Bondi Beach, the story combines the elements of youth in crisis and Australia's modern Aboriginal tragedy. It's the dramatic love story of an aspiring young writer and a woman struggling against the guilt of her first sexual experience who meet a charismatic young Aboriginal man who is driven by hatred of the white society around him.

The boundaries between fiction and reality merge as three stories of love, family and relationships play out amidst homelessness, drugs and crime. Set in infamous Cabramatta, widely regarded as the 'crime and drug capital' of Australia, the film is a glimpse into the lives of those youths whom we notice living on the streets, but belong to the 'brick wall' that we see but never hear from.

The business of being black today takes many forms: outrageous, courageous, mysterious, simple, straightforward and complex. The good, the bad and the ugly. But what makes our bit of business unique?
The 13 short films in this series are

In 1929, Arthur Upfield, Australia's premier crime writer, plotted the perfect murder for his novel, 'The Sands of Windee'. Meanwhile, one of his friends, stockman Snowy Rowles, put the scheme into deadly effect, even before the book was published. The result was one of Australia's most sensational murder trials of the 1930s.

US MOB transports young people from around the globe to the little known world of Hidden Valley, in the central deserts of Australia through the eyes of Aboriginal teenagers Charlie, Jacquita and their bush community friends. On this journey they encounter extraordinary challenges, exciting cultural experiences and dramatic external forces that shape the lives of Town Camps kids in Alice Springs. From building bush bikes to hunting traditional foods, from skin name relationships to sacred sites, from child deafness and substance abuse to traditional ceremonies, US MOB explores the youth perspective and voice on all these issues with integrity, humour and drama inside a framework of Aboriginal community concern.

From humble beginnings operating out of a terrace house in Redfern 20 years ago, the Aboriginal voice on Sydney radio has struggled to seal its place on the city's airwaves. For Koori Radio, its roller-coaster ride in the battle for a fulltime on-air licence ended in success back in 2002. And since then the station's gone from strength to strength with the broadcaster opening its new state-of-the-art studio late last year. From the Message Stick series.

The Message Stick vehicle is a 1961 ex-Army Land Rover that first served in the Vietnam War and is now rebuilt for peace. The vehicle travelled around Australia for eight years to different Aboriginal communities, as they transformed it dot by dot into a modern-day motorised Message Stick and a moving art gallery combining art, music, bush medicine and storytelling.

PRODUCER Susan Moylan-Coombs
DIRECTOR Susan Moylan-Coombs

The year 2007 and specifically Sunday 27 May 2007, marked the 40th anniversary of Australia's most successful referendum and a defining event in our nation's history. Reconciliation Australia hosted an event at Old Parliament House, 'Their Spirit Still Shines', honouring surviving members of the Federal Council for the Advancement of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders (FCAATSI) who played such an important part in the campaign, which culminated in the overwhelming 'Yes' vote.  CAST Inala Community

The south-western Brisbane suburb of Inala was originally established to provide affordable accommodation to World War II veterans during the postwar housing shortage. By the early 1960s, many Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people had also moved to the area and today, nearly eight per cent of residents living in Inala are Indigenous. But over the years the suburb has endured negative press and unwarranted stereotypes. The community has banded together to start a unique Indigenous hip-hop and R'n'B festival called 'Stylin' Up'. This year marks the 50th anniversary of the birth of television in Australia. What have been the images of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people on our television screens during this time? What story has been told and from whose perspective? We look at the television being made about Aboriginal people by non-Aboriginal people and the birth of the Aboriginal Programs Unit within the ABC producing programs such as 'Blackout' through to 'Message Stick'.

 WRITER Pauline Clague

In Part 1, we learn how 50 years ago secret atomic tests were carried out on Australian soil in north-western South Australia. The traditional Aboriginal communities of the region were to be moved for their own safety but somehow they were covered in radioactive fallout. Some of the local Anangu people suffered radiation poisoning and died and many are still enduring the effects of that toxic exposure today. In Part 2, we discover 25 years ago the Anangu People of South Australia were allowed to return to part of their traditional lands affected by atomic bomb testing in the 50s and 60s. After what was called a nuclear waste cleanup they moved back to the settlement of Oak Valley in the Spinifex country of their forefathers.

Five very different Indigenous women come together from all over Australia for a girls' night out. Anchored in the preparations for their big night out, the documentary moves between that night and explorations of each of the women's lives. While these women certainly share a bond of history and identity, there are complex cultural differences between them and varying depths of Aboriginal knowledge and awareness.

White Australia celebrated its 200th birthday in 1988. The occupation has lasted for 10 generations. But Australia's Aborigines have occupied the land for 2,000 generations, more than 40,000 years. The six films in BLACK FUTURES are not a passive observation. They aim to make an argument in words and pictures to open public debate and to challenge assumptions about the value of Aboriginal culture to the wider Australian community.

In 1972, the urban Black communities of Australia were the forgotten people within the forgotten people. We are shown snippets of life as it was for the members of the Melbourne Black community as they struggled to be recognised as a distinct cultural group. From protest marches and Black Studies meetings, to the corroborees being conducted at half-time at the local footy, this short film encapsulates the desire and the determination that urban Blacks had across Australia in the early 70s to define who they were to themselves and to the rest of the world.

DIRECTOR Michael Riley

From the early 1800s Aboriginal people have been used as guides and trackers by the police force. This century one of the most highly regarded was Sergeant Alexander Riley of Dubbo, NSW. In 1943 Alexander Riley was awarded the highest police award, the Kings' Medal, for distinguished services. During Tracker Riley's time with the NSW Police Force between 1911 and 1950 he was instrumental in solving several murder cases and finding numerous people lost in the bush. A great many people owe their lives to his exceptional tracking skills. A beautifully made and penetrating film that is a tribute to Tracker Riley, one of the greatest of all Aboriginal trackers as told by his family and descendants.

BLAKTRAX is a fresh and exciting five-part series produced on Indigenous Australian musicians, covering a wide range of styles including rock, R'n'B, blues, country, hip hop and pop. The music forms the core of each of the documentaries which drives the series. Each story is about their family background, the history of their country as well as day-to-day experiences and their successes as we follow them through a period in their careers. This includes being at home with each artist, in their communities, on tour and on the road, behind the scenes and in the studio. Rather than a 'talk fest' with overlay, each documentary is produced with an 'on the road' style and feel.

PRODUCER Paul Humfress
DIRECTOR Michael Riley

Boomalli is an artists' cooperative formed by urban Aboriginal and Koorie photographers, painters, sculptors, designers and filmmakers. This visually inspiring film focuses on contemporary rather than traditional work and ways of life. We see the work of clothing designer Bronwyn Bancroft and the sand sculptures of Fiona Foley. Tracey Moffatt discusses her film about Aboriginal girls, and the painters Raymond Meeks and Jeffrey Samuels discuss the thematic approach to their art and how they incorporate aspects of traditional Aboriginal painting. The artists also talk about Aboriginal identity and how this is expressed in their work.

WRITER Tracey Moffatt

The changing face of multicultural Australia on the screen, in both film and television, is the focus of this complex documentary which uses non-sync interviews, archival footage, and unusual devices to shatter notions of national identity and ethnic stereotyping in Australian drama. It documents the recent changes that indicate that the industry is at a turning point.

PRODUCER Penny Smallacombe
 DIRECTOR Sascha Ettinger-Epstein
 WRITER Sascha Ettinger-Epstein
 DOP Gareth Tillson

Since the dawn of time there has been a universal fascination with the human heart that no other organ has inspired. Although modern Western medicine tells us it's just a pump, the belief that the heart is something far greater persists. But are people who have a heart transplant just receiving a spare part? Ask Elka, a desperately sick but lively young 17-year-old girl, waiting restlessly in St Vincent's Hospital. Or John and Anna Gava who are travelling up to Brisbane to meet the recipient of their deceased son's heart. What really happens when a human heart gives life to a body other than the one it was created in?

 WRITER Julie Nimmo

One hundred years ago, the Chief Protector of Aborigines in Queensland set up what he described as a dumping ground for the lame, the halt and the incorrigible black criminals of the State. The place he was talking about was Cherbourg. These days, Cherbourg is a thriving community of 2,500 people, 200 km north-west of Brisbane. The community recently had its 100-year anniversary, but as you'll see, it was more a celebration of survival than a centenary. From the Message Stick series.

In 1988 a delegation of Aboriginal people from Tasmania went to Libya to change the focus of Aboriginal Affairs in Australia. This is their story. With the 1988 Bicentenary celebrations looming, the National Aboriginal Movement in Australia was facing desperate times. For some of the mob, from Tasmania at least, something had to be done. This documentary is an insightful look at that time when a group of Aboriginal people sought help from the Libyan Government. Their action shocked and panicked both the Australian Government and the wider community. Fourteen years on, Darlene Mansell and Jim Everett, two members of that delegation, tell their side of the story. From the Message Stick series.

In 1991 the Queensland Government passed the Queensland Land Act which enabled Aboriginal traditional owners to claim certain specifically gazetted areas of Crown land. One such area was the Cape Melville and Flinders Island National Parks in Princess Charlotte Bay on the eastern coast of Cape York Peninsula. For countless generations the traditional owners of these lands (the Yiduwarra) have called this their home. This documentary is the story of the forced dispersal from their homelands, and the struggle for their return. The story unfolds through the gentle voices of the Yiduwarra and rare archival film and sound recordings.

PRODUCER Ivan Sen

DIRECTOR Ivan Sen

CAST Charles Perkins, Gough Whitlam, William McMahon, Cath Walker, Gary Foley, Paul Coe, Dennis Walker

On Australia Day 1972, four young Indigenous activists arrived on the lawns of Parliament House in Canberra. They had little idea their small protest would turn into a major defining period of Australia's modern history. The Aboriginal Tent Embassy became a national voice for Aboriginal Australians, and played a major role in the creation of the first Australian land rights legislation. With rarely seen images and interviews, EMBASSY DAYS presents this raw and emotional time as it was captured. From the Message Stick series.

CAST Warumpi Band

The legendary Warumpi Band have told the stories of Indigenous Australia in their lyrics for over 20 years. From the classic 'My Island Home' to the raw 'From the Bush', they have interpreted contemporary Aboriginal life. The band broke up, after 20 years together, in October 2000. Over the years the song-writing team of Neil Murray and George Djilanga have had a huge amount to say about Australia and the Aboriginal world. A veritable treasure of archival performance and interview material has been gathered to enhance this program.

WRITER Kelrick Martin

In 1958, Faith Thomas was the first Indigenous person to be selected to play cricket for her country, the first Indigenous woman to be selected to play any sport for Australia and she remains the only Aboriginal woman to play international cricket for Australia. Faith was born in the Nepabunna Aboriginal mission in South Australia in 1933. Her mother, Ivy, was a traditional Adnyamathana woman from the Flinders Ranges, her father a German migrant. Ivy felt this wasn't the atmosphere for her baby so she placed Faith in the hands of two missionaries at the Colebrook Children's home at Quorn. It was the other children at Colebrook who gave Faith her name and contrary to the views of some, she always considered that hers was not the stolen generation, but rather the chosen generation. Charles Perkins grew up in Alice Springs where segregation was the rule. Sent away to Adelaide for an education, he became increasingly aware of the injustices perpetrated against Australian Aborigines. In 1965, the first Aborigine to attend university, he instigated the 'freedom ride' - a bus load of concerned people, mostly students, who visited outback Australia, notably Walgett and Moree, to escalate the level of public awareness of racial intolerance in Australia. This video documents that journey and talks to those who took part.

The intervention into Indigenous communities in the Northern Territory has not had the best of publicity. In the two years since it was announced, not one new house has been built despite the hundreds of millions of dollars put aside for the purpose. No paedophile rings have been uncovered and the federal government's own review into the intervention's effect on alcohol consumption is mixed at best. Producer, Rima Tamou returned to the Northern Territory to hear fresh voices on the intervention. From the Message Stick series.

Glad

25 min

PRODUCER Ross Hutchens
DIRECTOR Jill Milroy

Glad Milroy has had her 15 minutes of fame. In 1987 her story was central to the success of Sally Morgan's book, 'My Place'. But like many other stories now being told of the stolen generation it has value as a story of the past, not the present. Far from closing the chapter in our history, the retelling of these stories has brought many unresolved issues to the surface for the storytellers. Her daughter's book gave Glad every reason to believe she had sisters she has never seen, but it didn't find them for her. Now 70, Glad journeys back to the country she was taken from. It's her last chance to fulfil the burning kinship obligations she feels for her family that doesn't know her, and may not even exist.

Opera singer Harold Blair was born in Cherbourg, Queensland in 1924, and was destined for greatness. He was 17 and working as a tractor driver at a sugar mill in Fairymead, when his workmates coerced him into singing at a concert in Childers. In early 1945, Harold attracted a record tally of listeners' votes when he appeared in the radio amateur hour talent quest. With that performance, Harold became one of the first Australian Aborigines to perform on national radio. From the Message Stick series.

PRODUCER Lorna O'Shane
DIRECTOR Lorna O'Shane
WRITER Lorna O'Shane

Looks at the struggle by Indigenous people to continue the practice of traditional hunting both on sea and land. Traditional hunting has long been a practice that has kept Indigenous communities going. The determination of native title for Australia's Indigenous population has meant the right to hunt has been recognised by Australian common law. This may represent a new era in native title litigation but it signifies something more fundamental in the need to retain a cultural identity. Part of ICAM series.

The story of the journey made by Warlpiri people from Lajamanu, travelling on foot, horseback and tractor across 230 km of the Tanami Desert back to Kamira - an Aboriginal out-station. Kamira has been home to the Warlpiri Aborigines for thousands of years. In the 1950s and 1960s Warlpiri people were forcibly moved from their country into government settlements. Since the late 1960s some Aboriginal people have been voting with their feet against the assimilation policies. They are walking away from those days towards the freedom of their own land. This video tells the story of that return.

DIRECTOR Lorna O'Shane
WRITER Lorna O'Shane

A very personal look at a Native Title Claim in Far North Queensland. Karma Waters is a pastoral property outside the town of Mareeba. This historic Land Agreement was the first determination of Native Title over a Pastoral Lease in Australia. The owners of the property, Alan and Karen Pederson struck a deal with the Western Yalanji people, the traditional owners of the area. However, the journey to achieving a deal suiting both parties was never an easy one. Part of ICAM series.

Line in the Sand (Palm Island)

26 min

PRODUCER Tanya Denning
DIRECTOR Tanya Denning
WRITER Tanya Denning

Its labels have included 'dysfunctional' to 'violent war zone', yet more than 3,000 Indigenous people living in near poverty refuse to leave Palm Island and have instead united in fights for justice and ultimately a fight for their home. The death of Mulrudji Doomadgee, nearly two years ago, marked the 147th black death in custody since the handing down of the Royal Commission in 1990. It brought Palm Island into the national and international spotlight, yet again. The world watched as an angry community reacted to the suggestion the death was accidental - they torched the police station and police residences. What followed was a 'terrorist' style operation where a 'battalion' of hooded police arrived in helicopters, to arrest the rioters and 'secure' safety to the island. From the Message Stick series.

In the 1970s in Australia's Western Desert, a teacher named Geoff Bardon helped start one of the most significant art movements of the 20th century. Working with the Aboriginal community at Papunya, he encouraged the people to paint their traditional dot designs using Western materials. Bardon also encouraged the artists to value their work commercially as well as spiritually, believing that by selling paintings the people could become independent of welfare as well as bring Indigenous art to the attention of the wider community.

'He's taken the land. He believes it is his. He won't give it back.' A documentary about the impact of the Kalgoorlie gold rush on the Aboriginal people in the region. Aboriginal fringe dwellers of the goldfields of Western Australia tell their own story of what happened to their people when they were invaded by tens of thousands of miners in the great Kalgoorlie gold rush of the 1890s. The film shows the conditions of the survivors living in horrific poverty next to flourishing gold and nickel mines and uranium developments, and of the Maralinga tests and those who died there, as the victims to British bombs and official neglect.

The Labor Day long weekend is traditionally a time when Aboriginal Rugby League teams from across NSW get together to take part in what is known as 'The Knockout'. Always hosted by the previous year's winner, teams gather in a rugby league competition which sees teams knocked out one by one until it comes down to two teams. However, a split has occurred in the organisation of 'The Knockout', and this year will see the running of two competitions. Part of ICAM series.

Believed to be the highest serving Indigenous Police Officer at the time of his retirement in 2001, Col Dillon has faced racism and adversity head-on and has never shied away from exposing those who dishonoured his profession. Col Dillon was heavily involved in the Royal Commission into Black Deaths in Custody. He was a vocal critic of the Beattie Government's decision to scrap DATSIP (Department of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Policy), and recently quit the Department over the Queensland Government's lack of response into the findings of the Mulrunji Doomadgee case. He is now pursuing a career in the private sector and has no idea what the future holds for him. From the Message Stick series.

Since the 1930s, the South Sydney Rabbitohs have been developing Indigenous players and introducing them to A grade football, even during a time when Indigenous people weren't recognised as citizens in Australia. The South Sydney Leagues Club's success with Indigenous players has inspired other national Rugby League clubs to look at ways of mirroring their recruitment programs for Indigenous players and ways of working closely with the Indigenous community in other social ventures. This program explores the past and present interaction the club has in South Sydney and the recognition in 2007 of their Indigenous heritage through the use of the 'black' bunny for away games. Uranium mining has long been a source of conflict between mining companies, Aboriginal and environmental activists. Olympic Dam Mine in South Australia is no exception. Set up near the town of Roxby Downs, it is the largest uranium mine in the country. Opposition to the mine comes from environmental groups concerned about the impact operations may have on the environment, and from various Aboriginal community members, worried about the potential loss of cultural heritage and the destruction of sacred sites. 'We're in this society but not of it. They're in this country but not of it' (Mary Graham). This documentary portrays the strength and continuity of Aboriginal people and our culture, despite the changes occurring as a result of colonialism. The strength of our culture is manifested in song, dance, ceremony, the flag, Aboriginal identity and in the land itself. It is also expressed in the importance of relatedness between land and people, between generations, groups, families and cousins. An Indigenous expression and style is emerging in video and film production to relate the issues that concern us. This program is one example of the current developments in Indigenous methods of video and film production in Australia.

From a cold industrial landscape we travel to the country of northern NSW where we meet four Indigenous teenagers. We intimately learn their dreams, their lives and most importantly hear their voices. These four unique people live in a world of constant influence, where the shelter which surrounds them is constantly shifting. The film gives a voice to four young survivors of assimilation and offers a penetrating insight into the lives of Australia's indigenous youth, as they search for a sense of purpose in a forever 'shifting shelter'.

WRITER Michael Riley

Boxing is one sport that has produced some outstanding Indigenous talent such as Lionel Rose, Tony Mundine and George Bracken. One of the ways Indigenous boxers were discovered was through a series of tent boxing circuses that once travelled the country. TENT BOXERS tells the story of Aboriginal involvement in these tent boxing circuses. It combines first person accounts of tent boxing life with rich archival material of the time.

Tent Embassy

16mm
58 min

PRODUCER Frances Peters-Little
DIRECTOR David Sandy
WRITER Frances Peters-Little

A provocative analysis of Aboriginal engagement in white politics during the past 20 years. It all began in 1972 with the establishment of a number of tents on the lawns of Parliament House in Canberra. In effect, it was an Aboriginal Tent Embassy and so began the metaphor for this black-white political engagement. The program analyses the original political claims which sparked off the early determination to face the government head-on. It also considers the outcome of those claims. That, in turn, has affected contemporary Aboriginal politics which when compared with the early 1970s has taken on a far more passive and personal stance.

Some legal experts and politicians have suggested that the changes to the Electoral Act will make it more difficult for Indigenous Australians to cast their vote at this year's Federal Election. The new changes mean first time voters must provide 100 points of ID on or before the day the election date is called. On top of this they must provide original documents and have their enrolment forms witnessed by an authority. This poses real challenges in remote communities where the local mail plane service is limited. This program focuses on the cultural, bureaucratic and geographical diversity of the Lingari Electorate in the Northern Territory, which is one-sixth of Australia's land mass. PRODUCER Ivan Sen, David Jowsey
WRITER Ivan Sen

In 1949, Evelyn Orcher was abducted as a 14-year-old girl from her NSW country home. Her family lived with the pain of not knowing her whereabouts for 31 years, until 1979, when Evelyn appeared on television in an attempt to find her family. The day after the program went to air, Evelyn received a visit from a woman she had never met. It was her niece. Evelyn had finally found her family, after 31 long years. An emotional family reunion followed, but after the emotion faded, Evelyn returned to her former life. The torment of the past had opened fresh wounds, and a new struggle had just begun. Part of Message Stick series.

WILLIGAN'S FITZROY takes us to the small Aboriginal community of Fitzroy Crossing in Western Australia. Through the eyes of the local Aboriginal Employment Coordinator, Joe Ross, we take an informal journey into the world of the Bunaba tribe, their lives, their culture and the modern infrastructures they are developing to make their community both financially and culturally viable. One thing that has long united the Bunaba people is the fight to stop their beloved Fitzroy River from becoming a massive dam project. We gain an inkling into the enormous spiritual and economic losses at stake for this remote Kimberley town.

'Women of the Sun' (1990) depicted the lives of four Aboriginal women between the 1820s and the 1980s. The first TV series made in their own language, it was an instant classic. Producing the mini-series had a major impact on the director Bob Weis, and 25 years on he decides to reassess its importance to others, revisiting the women who played the leads to find out what they experienced, producing a fascinating and profoundly moving account.

Addresses the term Terra Nullius (Latin term meaning, 'land belonging to no one') the term used by the British Government to justify the dispossession of Aboriginal people. In the eyes of the British, Indigenous people were merely roaming the land and had no agriculture, social or religious structure. This was of course a falsehood and can be dissolved by looking at the way the land has been mapped by Aboriginal people over the last 120,000 years or more.

WRITER Oomera Coral Edwards

Between 1883 and 1967 approximately 6,000 Aboriginal children in NSW were taken from their families and put into institutions run by the Aborigines Welfare Board. While in the 'homes', the children were deprived of their Aboriginal identity. This film tells of the effects that such an upbringing had and the struggle of one woman to regain her Aboriginality.

An Elders' Debutante Ball is being held in Kempsey! The 'debutantes' are aged 42 to 84 and are being partnered by husbands, sons and grandsons - the youngest is 13. This story will give us the opportunity to reflect on the lives of some of these extraordinary women and to delve into universal themes of ageing, family and community. It is also a chance to positively portray elders as active, social people who like having fun within their community.

Five people come together on a dusty, desolate cotton field. Angry at the world and each other, racial tensions are ignited as Leroy, Mick, Amy and Vance work alongside each other in the heat of the day. Ruby, Leroy's mother, is the only one who notices the uneasy sky forcing the elements to change. When a violent dust storm awakes, racial differences must be put aside as the five weather the storm together. Australia's history, black and white, is revealed as the storm unearths the secrets that lie beneath the surface of the land.

HARRY'S WAR is a story of mateship, brothers in arms and friendship that embraces culture, war and death. Harry and Mitch are two mates who go off to fight in the jungles of Papua New Guinea during World War II. Harry is a Koorie and Mitch a non-Aboriginal Australian. In the story, we see Harry grow from a boy in uniform to a man in war. We watch as he learns of his impending death and how he faces it. HARRY'S WAR is about when mateship transcends race, cultural differences and societal barriers. It is a story of how war drives men to the brink and the journey becomes more important than the journey's end.

Who is Aboriginal? Which tribe do you come from? Who is your mob? You don't look Aboriginal. Are you full-blooded? How much Aboriginal blood do you have? Every one of us at some point in our lives has stood up for what we believed in or we finally discovered what we are actually trying to do in this world. We have celebrated this revelation in many ways. That initial step or sentence can have a lasting impact.

Set in the Nyitting Times (the icy cold times) when the Nyungar had no fire to cook his meat because the moon kept the fire for himself. This is the story of the Murray River region and of two birds - the sparrow hawk and the pigeon - and their quest to give the Nyungar the fire to stay warm and have cooked meat. The film explores this concept through the use of Nyungar art, dance, song and storytelling.

According to the filmmaker, MEMORY is about the resilience of love and its power to transcend cultural boundaries. It is also about the finality of death, and the ironic moment of liberation it can give us. How does the death of someone we love affect us and move us to re-examine who we are and where we are going? But we think it also makes insightful points about death and mourning in Aboriginal and Western cultures.

A musical drama set in 1930s' outback Australia. Entranced by the beautiful, beaming moon, a young girl steps out of her window. When her parents check, she is gone. The local police recommend Aboriginal Tracker Albert, but the father insists 'no blackfella is to set foot on my land'. Albert watches helplessly as her every trace is stamped to dust by the white men conducting a line search. Based on the true story of Aboriginal Tracker Riley in Dubbo.

The story of Alice, a young Aboriginal girl who absorbs the fear and shame of her adoptive white parents. The film links the denial of Aboriginality to an invasive scene of incest which occurs throughout the film. A look at how untreated fear and shame get passed from one generation to the other. Expressionist images repeatedly disrupt the narrative to haunt us with the denial of racial and sexual abuse - legacies of colonisation.

PRODUCER Jason De Santolo
DIRECTOR Mark McMillan
WRITER Mark McMillan
CAST Stuart Fenton, Jason Carter, Mitchell Stanley, Freda Glynn, Guy Simon, Bradley Rossiter

WHO ARE YOU? is a story of internal conflict and how we accept the many parts of our identity that make us a whole person. How we see ourselves and how we want others to see us do not always meet up. Does society force people to hide parts of who they are within themselves? And can those parts ever be allowed to exist as a whole? WHO ARE YOU? gives a snapshot into a few people's lives, prejudices and identities.

CAST Ralph Cotteril, Bradley Byquar, Steve Dodd

Australia, 1867. In the cold, bleak high country, Jess, a young black tracker and his elderly sergeant follow the trail of a killer, a traditional Indigenous man. With every step closer, the killer delves into the mind and soul of Jess, until ultimately being faced with the choice between his ancestral heritage and the only life he has ever known.

 DIRECTOR Kirstie Parker
 WRITER Kirstie Parker
 DOP Murray Lui
 CAST Eliza Wellington, Teesha Archibald

Ruby doesn't respond well to criticism, especially from those she loves.

YEARN is about the spoken and often unspoken disapproval experienced by people who are 'different', and the solidarity and loyalty forged among those that share that mantle of exclusion. It is also about love, and how it is made stronger through a defiant unity.

Produced by Screen Australia's Strategy & Research Unit, The Black List is an important addition to reference material on Indigenous filmmaking in Australia, cataloguing the work of 257 Indigenous Australians with credits as producer, director, writer or director of photography on a total of 674 screen productions.

Listings go back as far as 1970 for feature films and telemovies, to 1980 for documentaries and mini-series, and to 1988 for shorts and series.

Titles are indexed by year and by filmmaker, and the book also features a statistical summary and timeline of key titles and events.
