THE SEALEY BUYING GUIDE TO MIG WELDERS

View our current range of MIG Welders here:

MIG welding involves a wire fed from a spool in the welder unit, which runs through a hose to a handheld torch. The wire performs two jobs; it supplies voltage to melt the metal being welded, and acts as a filler. The process offers high productivity, as the wire is continuously fed.

Gas is used to shield the weld from impurities which would cause the weld to be porous and weak. The gas is fed from a gas bottle mounted on the welder unit, up through the hose to a gas cup at the end of the torch. The gas can be easily blown away, particularly if you are working outdoors, resulting in poor quality welds. In recent years, Gasless MIG welders have become popular. They use a specialised flux coated wire to shield the weld, enabling them to be used outside.

WIRE

The wire performs two jobs; it supplies voltage to melt the metal being welded, and acts as a filler.

The main difference between flux-core and MIG welding is that flux-core welding does not require a shielding gas which makes it more portable. The self-shielding flux-cored wire provides the shielding gas when burned. This makes flux-core more suited to welding in windy conditions.

- FLUX-CORED WIRE
- ✓ No gas bottle required.
 - ✓ Can be used outdoors.
 - ✓ Works through paint, rust and dirt.
 - ✗ Produces slag and splatter.
 - ✗ Can't weld Aluminium.
 - ✗ More expensive.

- SOLID MIG WIRE
- ✓ No slag, little spatter.
 - ✓ Handles thin metal well.
 - ✓ Produces cleaner welds.
 - ✗ Longer to set-up.
 - ✗ Needs clean surface.
 - ✗ Requires gas bottle.

TYPES OF GAS & INDUSTRIAL GAS SUPPLY

CO₂
CO₂ CARBON DIOXIDE
 Used for mild steel.

CO₂/ARGON
 A mixture of 20% Carbon Dioxide and 80% Argon which gives a smoother and cleaner weld than pure CO₂.

ARGON
ARGON
 Used for aluminium.

THERE ARE THREE TYPES OF GAS USED:
 If you plan to run your machine on gas, you need to consider how much welding you plan to do. Lower amperage machines tend to use small disposable or re-fillable bottles. If you plan to do a lot of welding, a large industrial gas bottle will be more economical. However, your welder will need to be converted to cater for the larger bottles. Larger amperage welders are designed for use with industrial gas bottles.

ENVIRONMENT & POWER SUPPLY

Location Gasless Gas

The first consideration when purchasing a MIG welder is where you intend to weld. If you plan to work outdoors, you need to purchase a MIG capable of gasless welding. Usually, these machines can be easily converted to run with or without gas.

Secondly, you need to consider the power supply available in your workplace. Some machines can be run on a conventional 13Amp domestic supply, while others may require a 30Amp or even three phase supply. If you plan to weld thin metal, such as car bodywork, a lower amperage is all that's required, therefore 13Amps is sufficient.

TORCH & HOSE

EURO CONNECTION ENABLES QUICK AND SIMPLE PLUG CONNECTION TO WELDER.

EURO TORCH

NON LIVE TORCH

Larger MIG welders include welding torches and hoses with a bayonet type connector. This allows the user to easily change between hoses/torches, which is particularly important if you frequently weld different types of metal i.e., mild steel to aluminium. Old school MIG welders have a permanently live torch, but most modern machines have a switch in the torch to turn on the voltage, feed the wire and turn on the gas supply. This is a safer and easier method and used in all Sealey MIG welders.

DUTY CYCLE

The duty cycle of a welder reflects how long it can weld in a 10-minute period before it must cool down. For example, with a duty cycle of 60% at 100 amps the welder can be operated continuously for 6 minutes before it will need a 4 minute cool down period.

Generally duty cycle isn't important for automotive repair work, as the amps tend to be low (higher duty cycle at lower amps). If you plan to carry out a lot of welding, the duty cycle is a very important consideration when comparing welders.

SAFETY

Safety First! MIG welders create very hot temperatures and emit a very bright light, which can cause severe damage to both exposed skin and eyesight. Therefore, it is essential to wear the correct safety equipment.

EN 12941 is the European standard for a complete powered air filtering device incorporating a face helmet or visor. This standard outlines three classes of performance, which define the following maximum levels of inward leakage*: 10% for TH1, 2% for TH2 and 0.2% for TH3 (see individual Model No's for TH classification).

*Inward Leakage estimates the performance of a respiratory device by measuring contaminants that leak through a respirator from various sources, including filter penetration, face seals, valves & gaskets.
