Remote interrogators (located a few inches to 300 feet from the transponder device) electronically retrieve the data via electromagnetic energy (radio or microwave frequency) and send the data to the automated information services. The technology is divided into two categories of data storage and retrieval systems – passive and active. Active frequency identification systems are omni-directional and require moderately expensive high-capacity transponder devices. Active devices are effective portable databases and facilitate the rapid transfer of data to automated information systems with standoff capability.
