Clinton Wins in Puerto Rico

Despite lopsided loss, Obama inches closer to nomination

SAN JUAN, PUERTO RICO | Hillary Rodham Clinton won a lopsided, but largely symbolic victory Sunday in Puerto Rico's presidential primary, the final act in a weekend of tumult that pushed Barack Obama tantalizingly close to the Democratic presidential nomination.

After winning roughly two-thirds of the votes in the primary, Clinton predicted she would have more combined votes than her rival when the primaries end Tuesday night, claimed victories in key swing states and said that no contender will command enough delegates to claim the nomination. "In the final assessment, I ask you: Which candidate best represents the will of the people who voted in this historic election?" she said.

Obama projected confidence, and even in defeat he gained 16 delegates in Puerto Rico, leaving him 48 short of the 2,118 needed to clinch the nomination.

Contrary to Clinton, Obama aides predicted he was on track to gain a delegate majority shortly after the primaries in South Dakota and Montana, and questioned her popular vote claim. Her assertion includes estimates for caucuses in Iowa, Nevada, Maine and Washington state, where no official popular vote is available. It also includes the results from Florida, where no campaigning occurred, and Michigan, where Obama's name was not on the ballot. (AP)

UNDERWEAR Thieves Secure in Their Masculinity

Police in a Colorado town are searching for two robbers whose masks showed plenty of fashion sense but little modesty: women's thong underwear. A surveillance video released last week by police in Arvada, Colo., shows two unarmed men inside the convenience store. They stole an undisclosed amount of cash and cigarettes on May 16. One man wore a green thong, and the other wore a blue thong. Each thong barely covered the man's nose, mouth and chin, and left the rest of his face exposed. One also wore a pink backpack in which he stuffed the stolen items. The suspects also wore T-shirts and pants and were described as being in their 20s. (AP)

THEFT Quarters Needed For Laundry Day

Police didn't have to look too hard to figure out the rightful home of a soda vending machine found in a front yard — they just followed the tracks. Deputies from the St. Francis County sheriff's office spotted a Pepsi machine on Thursday in the yard of a home in Hughes, Ark. A set of dolly tracks in front of the machine led back to a liquor store less than a mile away that had reported it missing. Two men in the yard fled when authorities arrived. One was arrested on suspicion of theft, fleeing on foot and obstructing government operations. The other remains at large. About 1,800 residents live in Hughes, near Memphis, Tenn. (AP)

Beyond Puerto Rico

Barack Obama said he had called Hillary Rodham Clinton Sunday afternoon to congratulate her on winning the Puerto Rico primary.

But Obama, speaking to a large outdoor rally at the "Corn Palace" in Mitchell, S.D., already seemed to be speaking of Clinton in the past tense, as he looks to the final primaries Tuesday — here and in Montana — to give him the delegates needed for the Democratic nomination.

After praising Clinton as a tenacious candidate, Obama added, "She is going to be a great asset when we go into November to make sure we defeat the Republicans."

On Monday, Obama heads to Oakland County, Mich. — an area known for its so-called "Reagan Democrats," swing voters John McCain is targeting, too. On Tuesday, as the last two primary polls close, Obama will be in Minnesota, another swing state. KEITH RICHBURG

Blaze Engulfs Movie Sets

Universal Studios loses iconic structures and footage in fire

UNIVERSAL CITY, CALIF. | King Kong's roar was silenced, and Marty McFly won't be going back to the future anytime soon.

A raging fire ripped through a lot at Universal Studios on Sunday and destroyed some of Hollywood's most familiar backdrops, including the courthouse square from "Back to the Future" and a streetscape featured in "Bruce Almighty," "Spider-man 2" and "Transformers."

It was the second fire at the historic site in nearly two decades, leveling facades, hollowing out buildings and creating the kind of catastrophe filmmakers relish re-creating. This time around, thousands of videos chronicling Universal's movie and TV shows were destroyed in the blaze.

But Universal officials said they were thankful no one was seriously injured at the theme park and that the damaged footage can be replaced.

"We have duplicates of everything," said NBC Universal President and Chief Operating Officer Ron Meyer. "Nothing is lost forever."

Universal officials didn't immediately say what their plans would be for the site.

The blaze broke out on a sound stage featuring New York brownstone facades around 4:30 a.m. at the 400-acre property, Los Angeles County Fire Chief Michael Freeman said. The fire was contained to the lot, but about 400 firefighters were still trying to put it out several hours later.

The cause of the fire is under investigation.

Along with the courthouse square, the famous clock tower used to help send Michael J. Fox's character through time was damaged, fire officials said. Two mock New York and New England streets used for moviemaking and as tourist displays were a total loss, Los Angeles County Fire Inspector Darryl Jacobs said.

An exhibit housing a mechanically animated King Kong that bellows at visitors on a tram also was destroyed.

All three sites were either damaged or destroyed during another fire at Universal Studios in November 1990. That fire caused $25 million in damage and was started by a security guard who was sentenced to four years in prison after pleading guilty to arson.

The park remained closed Sunday afternoon as hundreds of visitors waited outside the gates, where acrid smoke lingered. Fire officials didn't believe air quality would pose a health hazard. GREG RISLING (AP)

A-Bomb Cleanup Proceeds

Manhattan Project relic will be torn down for an industrial park

OAK RIDGE, TENN. | Building the world's first full-scale uranium enrichment factory — a 45-acre monster that was the biggest industrial structure in the world at the time — took 18 months amid the race for the first atomic bomb.

Six decades later, federal authorities think they finally have a handle on just how long it will take to clean up and tear down the long-shuttered relic of the Manhattan Project: about 15 years.

The K-25 Building anchored the facility that supplied that first bomb dropped on Japan, then supported the nation's nuclear arsenal in the early years of the Cold War.

Now the roof of the building is leaking, the walls are buckling and threatening substances from mold to mercury are rife.

The number of truckloads of debris, in thousands, that demolishing the uranium complex will produce.

"We thought it would be done sooner. We thought it would be further along than it is now. But structural issues and additional contamination have slowed the work up," said Robert Brown, deputy director of the Department of Energy's Oak Ridge complex. "There has been a lot of work concentrating on making sure that people going into that building come out in the same condition they went in."

The massive four-story U-shaped structure, a half-mile long, dominates a 1,500-acre site that DOE has been working since 1996 to convert into an industrial park.

In 2002, the DOE, the Environmental Protection Agency and the state accelerated the cleanup. Crews have made enough headway that the DOE and its contractors say K-25 will be leveled by late 2010, and the rest of the site finished by 2016.

Demolishing K-25 has always been the biggest hurdle to "reindustrializing" the site. But the deteriorating state of a building filled with PCBs, asbestos and radioactive uranium adds to the urgency.

"We knew it was in bad condition; we just didn't know it was in horrible condition," Brown said.

Twister Blows Through Indianapolis

INDIANAPOLIS | Residents cleaned up Saturday after a tornado plowed a trail of destruction through the east side of Indianapolis, but they gave thanks that nobody was killed and that the only injuries were minor.

The storm blew through late Friday, ripping roofs off several apartment buildings, snapping trees and toppling power lines. Eighteen people were treated for

"very minor" injuries, said John Ball, the area's emergency management director.

"It is a miracle that we didn't have serious injuries or death," he said.

The high winds snapped trees, wrapped metal sheeting around a telephone pole and left a four-block-wide trail of debris about a mile long. (AP)

Clinton Considers Her Next Move

Race for Democratic nomination may come to a close this week

WASHINGTON | The race all but over, Hillary Rodham Clinton is determining how to end her historic candidacy with her dignity intact and future secure.

It's not an academic question, since rival Barack Obama is expected to secure enough delegates this week to claim the Democratic presidential nomination. The former first lady and New York senator is said to be considering a range of options, including dropping out of the race and endorsing Obama, suspending her candidacy to be available in the outside chance he stumbles or carrying her fight to the convention.

"It does appear to be pretty clear that Senator Obama is going to be the nominee," said Tom Vilsack, a former Iowa governor and a national co-chairman of Clinton's campaign. "After Tuesday's contests, she needs to acknowledge that he's going to be the nominee and quickly get behind him."

The decision Saturday by the party rules committee to seat disputed delegations from Michigan and Florida at half-strength extinguished the former first lady's last, slender hope of slowing Obama's march to the nomination.

Publicly, Clinton and her campaign surrogates are using the reinstatement of the Michigan and Florida delegations to renew their claim that she is leading Obama in the popular vote — a debatable point, since the popular vote was never tabulated in four caucus states and she includes the rogue contests in Michigan and Florida. But they believe some uncommitted super-delegates could be persuaded by the argument.

Privately, her aides have said Clinton's run is over and it's simply a matter of when it becomes formal. And after maintaining a respectful distance, Obama campaign aides have begun to reach out to the Clinton campaign in hopes of pulling together and ameliorating hard feelings. BETH FOUHY (AP)

Israel Sends Back Hezbollah Spy

Militant group returns Israeli soldiers' remains from 2006 conflict

JERUSALEM | Israel handed over a convicted Hezbollah spy to Lebanon on Sunday, and in a surprise move, the Islamic guerrilla group turned over what it said were the body parts of Israeli soldiers killed in a 2006 war.

The Hezbollah gesture, along with recent comments by its leader, signaled that a larger prisoner exchange could be in the works between the two bitter enemies.

Israel said Sunday's exchanges were unrelated to a deal that would include Israel's releasing the longest-serving Lebanese prisoner and Hezbollah setting free two soldiers captured in a 2006 cross-border raid that sparked a monthlong war.

But a senior Israeli military official, speaking on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the talks, said a deal was in the making, even though there was no timetable for completing it.

Israeli authorities released Nasim Nisr, an Israeli of Lebanese descent after he completed a six-year sentence for espionage and drove him from a prison in central Israel to the northern Rosh Hanikra crossing.

Hezbollah official Wafik Safa told the group's al-Manar TV that it handed over a box containing what it said were the remains of Israeli soldiers killed in the war.

Nasrallah has boasted in the past that he holds the arms and legs of Israeli soldiers.

The Israeli army said the remains would undergo forensic exams.

Helge Kvam, a Red Cross spokesman in Jerusalem, called Hezbollah's move a "complete surprise," and the Israeli military said the move was not coordinated.

Hezbollah leader Hassan Nasrallah predicted last month that Israel would soon release prisoners it is holding, and German mediators have been trying to work out a swap for months. ARON HELLER (AP)

Designer helped Paris become known as the world's fashion capital

PARIS | Legendary designer Yves Saint Laurent, who reworked the rules of fashion by putting women into elegant pantsuits that came to define how modern women dressed, died Sunday evening, a longtime friend and associate said. He was 71.

Pierre Berge said Saint Laurent died at his Paris home following a long illness.

Saint Laurent was widely considered the last of a generation that included Christian Dior and Coco Chanel, and made Paris the fashion capital of the world, with the Left Bank as its elegant headquarters.

In the fast-changing world of haute couture, Saint Laurent was hailed as the most influential and enduring designer of his time. From the first YSL tuxedo and his trim pantsuits to see-through blouses, safari jackets and glamorous gowns, Saint Laurent created instant classics that remain stylish decades later.

When the designer announced his retirement in 2002 at age 65 and the closure of the Paris-based haute couture house he had founded 40 years earlier, it was mourned in the fashion world as the end of an era. ELAINE GANLEY (AP)

Shootings Mar Macedonia Election

Prime minister claims win in parliamentary vote; gunbattles kill 1

SKOPJE, MACEDONIA | Macedonia's prime minister declared victory Sunday in the Balkan country's parliamentary election after a vote that was marred by gunbattles that left one person dead and eight wounded.

Nikola Gruevski said his center-right VMRO-DPMNE had won enough votes to gain a majority of parliament's 120 seats, and opposition leader Radmila Sekerinska conceded defeat.

Sunday's violence was a blow to Macedonia's hopes of proving its credentials to join the European Union and NATO.

But Gruevski said in his victory speech that while he regretted the violence, the vote was mostly fair and peaceful.

"Macedonia has the power to go ahead. The country has the energy for progress to join NATO and EU," Gruevski said.

Jovan Josifovski, the head of the state election commission, said that with votes from nearly 83 percent of polling stations counted, VMRO had won 48 percent of the vote — far ahead of the Social Democrats' 22 percent.

On Sunday, one person was killed and eight wounded in shootouts between rival ethnic Albanian groups or in standoffs with police, Interior Ministry spokesman Ivo Kotevski said. Twenty-one people were arrested.

The violence in ethnic Albanian areas forced authorities to suspend voting in 22 polling stations — 1 percent of the country's total, commission spokesman Zoran Tanevski said. ELENA BECATOROS (AP)

Australia Pulls Its Troops From Iraq

Iraqi spokesman cites opposition to proposed U.S.-Iraqi security deal

BAGHDAD | Australia, one of the first countries to commit troops to the Iraq war five years ago, ended its combat mission here Sunday and began sending its 550 combat troops home.

Kevin Rudd, the new prime minister, has said the Iraq mission had made Australia more of a target for terrorism, and he had promised to bring home his country's combat soldiers by the middle of this year.

Also on Sunday, Iraq's chief spokesman acknowledged differences with the U.S. over a proposed long-term security agreement and pledged the government will protect Iraqi sovereignty in ongoing talks with the Americans.

Opposition has been growing to the proposed U.S.-Iraqi security pact, which will replace the current U.N. mandate and could provide for a long-term American military role in this country.

Much of the opposition comes from anti-American Shiite cleric

An Australian guards an Iraqi office in 2003. Australians are now leaving Iraq.

Muqtada al-Sadr, but statements critical of the deal have also been issued by mainstream Sunni and Shiite figures who fear it will undermine Iraqi sovereignty.

In a statement Sunday, chief government spokesman Ali al-Dabbagh said the Iraqi negotiators have a "vision and a draft that is different" from the Americans', but that the talks, which began in March, were still in an early stage.

Pope John Paul II's Soul on Trial

Catholic officials query whether the late pontiff deserves sainthood

ROME | Evidence overflows from hundreds of boxes stacked to the ceiling in room after room in the Catholic Diocese of Rome — photos, drawings, letters and other items that church officials are scouring for the answer to a question: Is Pope John Paul II a saint?

The task here at the office of the Postulator of the Cause for Beatification and Canonization is to judge souls, a complex job even when the soul in question doesn't belong to a spiritual superhero such as John Paul, who died in 2005 as one of the most popular pontiffs in history.

Located down a towering marble hallway, through a locked glass

GIULIO BROGLIO/AP

Investigators at the Catholic Diocese of Rome are examining whether Pope John Paul II, who died in 2005, meets the church's two strict standards for sainthood.

door, the office is tasked with determining whether John Paul meets the Roman Catholic Church's two standards of sainthood: His life deserves to be imitated, and he has shown a post-mortem power to help those who pray to him, proving he is in heaven with God.

From the start, this has not been a typical investigation.

So far, investigators are coming down in his favor. Their leader told reporters recently that beatification, or elevation to the status of "blessed," often an intermediate step toward sainthood, could take place next spring.

The office has received a handful of arguments against sainthood for John Paul, whom reformers have long lambasted. Letters circulating point to the clergy sex abuse scandal, the treatment of women in the church and the repression of dissident theologians.

But what is found here overwhelmingly supports the late pope's "cause," often in the most affectionate terms — a stuffed animal from a couple who says he helped end their infertility, a wedding dress from a person who wanted a partner.

From the start, this has not been a typical investigation. On the day of John Paul's funeral in 2005, Catholics in St. Peter's Square shouted out "Santo subito!" — sainthood now! His successor, Pope Benedict XVI, waived the five-year wait before formal considerations could begin.

Since then, the advocacy has only stepped up to get John Paul quickly through a process that can take centuries. MICHELLE BOORSTEIN (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Multiple D.C. Killings Mar Weekend

Most of the slayings took place in the 5th Police District in NE

With city residents and officials grappling with what was already shaping up as one of the District's most violent weekends in recent memory, a young man was fatally shot and another man injured in Southeast early Sunday morning.

No arrests have been made in the death of Edward Mitchell, 21, who was found bleeding in the 4600 block of Livingston Road SE by officers on routine patrol at about 2:40 a.m. Saturday. The circumstances of the case remain under investigation, police said, as do those of the spate of shootings and stabbings from Friday night through early Saturday morning, and then again on Saturday night, that left seven men dead and four wounded.

Most of those incidents took place in the 5th Police District in Northeast, even though police have substantially boosted patrols there since a surge in crime last April.

Police investigate near Florida Avenue and Holbrook Street in Northeast D.C.

On Sunday, city officials expressed frustration at the mounting toll of homicides, which, at 73, for the first time surpassed the number of slayings at the same time last year. "There is just this culture of violence that persists," said D.C. Council member Harry Thomas Jr., D-Ward 5, as he stood near the spot on the 1100 block of Holbrook Street NE where three men were mowed down over in a hail of 35 bullets after an argument that may have begun in a nearby nightclub over the weekend.

Metrorail Train Hits Woman

WASHINGTON | Officials say a woman suffered only minor injuries when she was struck by a Metrorail train at the Smithsonian Metro station Sunday.

D.C. Fire and EMS Spokesman Alan Etter says the woman was lying between the rails of the tracks as the train went over her. He says she was taken to the hospital with minor abrasions.

The station was closed for more than an hour. Metro Spokesman Steven Taubenkibel says it's now open and trains are running. However, there were still residual delays Sunday afternoon.

The incident occurred just after 2:30 p.m. at the station located on the National Mall. In addition to tourists and museum visitors who regularly use the station, the disruption affected people attending a festival Sunday celebrating Israel's 60th anniversary. (AP)

Blu-Ray Still Behind

High-definition movie disc format is still too expensive for most

PRICEY FLICKS | Blu-ray stomped HD DVD to become the standard format for high-definition movie discs, but years may pass before it can claim victory over the good old DVD.

Noemi Velazquez, a 44-year-old warehouse worker, can explain why. She took one look at the $399 price tag of a Blu-ray player at a Best Buy store in Glendale, Calif., and kept going.

"I have to admit, Blu-ray is great," she said. "[But] I'm going to wait until they go to half-price."

Analysts, movie studios and the Blu-ray Disc Association, a manufacturing group, all say Blu-ray discs will eventually dominate video sales. The question is when.

Blu-ray stomped HD DVD to become the standard format for high-definition movie discs, but, due to its high cost, years may pass before it can claim victory over the DVD.

Consumers are balking at the $300-plus cost of most Blu-ray players, especially because only limited movie titles are available in the format.

"People aren't going to pay three times as much for a platform that's only half-baked," said Steve Wilson, a consumer electronics analyst with ABI Research.

Many also are waiting to see how cable, satellite and online video services play out. But, above all, consumers seem satisfied with standard-definition DVDs and players — even consumers who upgrade to high-definition TVs that can tap into Blu-ray's sharper picture and clearer sound.

Velazquez said that because she was still paying off a $1,000 high-definition TV she bought in October, she was happy for now to keep watching pay-TV movies and standard-definition DVDs on it.

Sony Corp.-backed Blu-ray was crowned the next-generation video technology in February after Toshiba Corp., creator of the competing HD DVD format, abruptly said it would drop the fight. The move came after Warner Bros. decided to join most other studios by going solely with Blu-ray, and video rental chains followed suit.

Manufacturers are planning a souped-up lineup of titles and special features on Blu-ray discs to boost sales this summer and during the coming Christmas season in the hope that Blu-ray can turn around the sagging home video market. And retailers are creating new displays to explain Blu-ray's benefits.

U.S. consumer spending on home video rentals and purchases in all formats, including DVD, HD DVD, Blu-ray and VHS, fell 3 percent to $24.1 billion last year. The figure was expected to drop another 2 percent this year to $23.6 billion, despite a sixfold increase in Blu-ray disc spending to $1.3 billion, according to Adams Media Research.

The Blu-ray increase is not enough to offset an expected 6 percent drop in overall spending on DVDs.

"The group that bought $2,000, 40-inch TVs are the ones that will lead the charge," said Tom Adams, founder of the research firm. "Everyone else will come along when the price comes down."

Do any retail stores around here sell the Asus EEE? I'd like to get one to use tomorrow. Best Buy (Tenleytown, Columbia Heights) carries it.

I've been looking at some of the DTV converter boxes, (I got my coupons last week!) and I was wondering if you'd seen the latest and greatest models. What's the best buy for $40?

The Dish model is the one that's supposed to retail for exactly $40, making it free with a coupon. Haven't tried it yet myself. Of the two I've tried, a Magnavox unit and a Zenith model, I liked the Zenith a little better.

I figured out how to set a password to wake my sleeping computer, but I haven't figured out how to set a password to start the computer. Can anyone clue me in?

Microsoft has had a harder time getting its developers to update their software for Vista.

To what extent do you think the divide between Microsoft and Apple is institutional?

The irony here is that almost all of Apple's developers have followed along, repeatedly rewriting their software. Meanwhile, Microsoft has had a much harder time getting its developers to update their software for Vista, even though there's much less work involved.

Pens Need to Become Kids Again

Pittsburgh attempts to ignore the fact that it must win 3 straight

STANLEY CUP | Maybe they should forget they're in the Stanley Cup finals. Or that they're playing the Detroit Red Wings, the team already being anointed as the NHL's next champion.

Most of all, Pittsburgh forward Max Talbot said, the Penguins should ignore the fact that the only way they can win the Stanley Cup is to be the first team in 66 years to rally from a 3-1 deficit in the finals.

With much of the hockey world anticipating the Red Wings will raise the Cup in their own arena in Game 5 on Monday night, Talbot said the Penguins should go back to being kids, playing before a few family members in a frigid rink.

"I put it this way: We're in a Pee-wee tournament right now and we're in the quarterfinals," Talbot said Sunday. "We have to win the next three games, and it's do or die. If you want to win the finals, you have to win the three games and that's where we are right now."

That's where the Penguins put Star Pittsburgh forward Evgeni Malkin couldn't score on Saturday, and the Penguins squandered a 1-0 lead. Now, they must win three straight against Detroit.

themselves, too, in the most precarious of positions going back to Joe Louis Arena, where they scored zero goals in two games to begin the series.

In a potentially pivotal Game 4 on Saturday night, the Penguins couldn't hold a 1-0 lead, couldn't score on a lengthy 5-on-3 in the third period, couldn't get a goal from Sidney Crosby or Evgeni Malkin but did allow Detroit's fourth line to score the decisive goal.

All that added up to a series-altering 2-1 loss that sent the Penguins back to Detroit with no promise they'll play another game in Pittsburgh that counts until October.

"I really believe that, if we play our game, we've got a great chance to win. ... When you're facing that point [elimination], sometimes it brings out the best in you," Crosby said. ALAN ROBINSON (AP)

Nationals Shut Out Again

For the 2nd straight day, Washington is blanked by Arizona

One day after Webb shut out Washington, Haren tossed seven scoreless innings to lead the Arizona Diamondbacks to a 5-0 victory over the Nationals on Sunday.

Haren (6-4) helped the Diamondbacks post back-to-back shutouts for the first time since May 26-27, 2006, at Cincinnati. Webb beat the Nationals 4-0 on Saturday to snap Arizona's five-game losing streak.

"Webby came out yesterday and did what an ace is supposed to do," Haren said. "He came out and set the tone."

Orlando Hudson's three-run homer, his second in three days and sixth of the season, gave Haren all the support he would need in the first inning. Haren gave up four hits, walked three and struck out five.

Relievers Chad Qualls and Tony Pena each got three outs to finish off the four-hitter.

This is exactly what the Diamondbacks expected when they acquired Haren from Oakland in a trade last winter, giving their rotation a formidable 1-2 punch.

The Diamondbacks jumped on Shawn Hill (0-2) in the first. After leadoff man Stephen Drew and Chris Young singled, Hudson lined a 1-1 pitch 385 feet over the right-field fence. Hill went four innings, his shortest outing of the season, allowing five runs.

"Three batters in, three runs down," Hill said. "That's my fault entirely, so it's completely unacceptable." ANDREW BAGNATO (AP)

Manny Hits No. 501 In 9-4 Win Over O's

ORIOLES | Manny Ramirez hit his 501st home run, Mike Lowell and J.D. Drew also connected, and the Boston Red Sox continued their hitting revival at the expense of the Baltimore Orioles in a 9-4 victory Sunday.

After becoming the 24th major leaguer to hit No. 500, Ramirez said Saturday night, "The next goal is 501." He took care of that item of business in his third at-bat, driving a 1-0 pitch from Brian Burres into the right-field seats to put Boston up 6-3 in the fourth inning.

Lowell homered two pitches later, and the Red Sox were on their way to making it three straight wins over the skidding Orioles. Boston on Monday will seek its first four-game sweep in Baltimore since 2002.

Drew, who missed two straight starts because of vertigo, had two hits and three RBI. Jason Ellsbury had three hits and a stolen base, his seventh steal in the series.

Any chance Baltimore had at a comeback was thwarted by Boston's solid defensive play. In the sixth inning, second baseman Dustin Pedroia dived to his right to snare a grounder before getting to one knee and throwing out Jay Payton. DAVID GINSBURG (AP)

Ainge Is Pride of Celtics

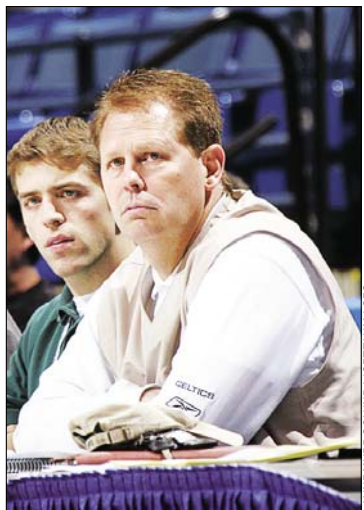

GM began rebuilding the franchise long before last year's draft

NBA FINALS | This is not how the Celtics planned to get back to the NBA finals.

Boston's franchise saw its luck run out again in the draft lottery last year, coming up with the worst pick and no shot at the megastars slotted 1-2. What the Celtics couldn't know at the time was that it was the best thing that could have happened.

"Everybody wants to talk about the overnight success, but I think that this was five years in the making," co-owner Steve Pagliuca said. "The plan was draft well, build up chips and build this into a championship team. We had the pieces, and we thought something good was going to happen — this year, next year."

With two potential franchise players at the top of last year's draft, Greg Oden and Kevin Durant, the Celtics seemed to be in a good position to pick up a key part of their turnaround. But three teams jumped over them in the lottery, and they wound up with the No. 5 selection.

"It was the worst possible pick we could have gotten, and it felt like the worst possible thing," said managing partner Wyc Grousbeck.

Celtics GM Danny Ainge tried to trade the No. 5 pick and developing big man Al Jefferson for Kevin Garnett, but Garnett didn't want to come to a losing team. So, Ainge sent the first-round pick — which, other than Paul Pierce, was his most valuable commodity — to Seattle in a package for Ray Allen.

Suddenly, Garnett was interested. Ainge picked him up from the Timberwolves in an unprecedented 7-for-1 deal.

The owners are effusive in their praise for Ainge — not just for making big trades, but also for drafting the "chips" that he cashed in for the all-stars. Without picks such as Al Jefferson (15th overall), Gerald Green (18th), Delonte West (24th) and Ryan Gomes (20th in the second round), they wouldn't have been able to acquire Garnett.

"Our strategy was to try to hit the longball, to win a championship, not to sign some midlevel players and get into the playoffs. We had to have the patience to build those chips up," Pagliuca said. "We recognized that time was an asset for us."

"I want to win in '08. ... And I've told the Dolphins from day one that was my intention."

— DE Jason Taylor, who said he did not demand a trade from Miami.

Arenas Will Still Opt Out

Wizards guard says he will wait until June 30 to make it official

WIZARDS | Gilbert Arenas, who was cleared to begin rehabilitating his surgically repaired left knee over the weekend, still plans on opting out of the final year of his contract with the Washington Wizards in order to become an unrestricted free agent but doesn't plan to file the necessary paperwork with the league office any sooner than the June 30 deadline.

The free agency period opens July 1, and Arenas has until June 30 to opt out of a deal that would pay him $12.8 million with the Wizards next season. On Sunday, via text message, he revealed his plan to wait until the final day before deciding.

When asked why he planned on waiting until June 30, Arenas wrote, "I just want to wait."

Arenas expects to make a full recovery by the time training camp opens in October. On Sunday, he wrote that he has followed his plan so far: traveling and spending time with his family when he might otherwise be in the gym working on his game.

"Everything feels good now," he wrote. "I have to get it strong this month."

Arenas has expressed a desire to sign a maximum level contract with the Wizards, one that could cover up to six years and earn him more than $100 million. The three-time all-star guard does not have an agent and plans on representing himself in negotiations.

However, Arenas has also said that he would be willing to take less if that would allow the Wizards to retain unrestricted free agent forward Antawn Jamison, an all-star who has been a Wizard since 2004.

Wizards President Ernie Grunfeld has consistently stated he intends to retain Arenas and Jamison, who, along with all-star Caron Butler, have helped form the core of a team that has made the playoffs four straight seasons.

HELL IS BEING SURROUNDED BY PANDAS: Yamaguchi Tatsuya and Jack Black stage a fight at the Cannes Film Festival.

Bear Essentials

Jack Black plays a furry version of himself in 'Kung Fu'

UNLIKELY HERO | Finding his inner panda was not too much of a stretch for Jack Black. All it took was finding the essence of his inner Jack.

With Black providing the lead voice, the animated comedy "Kung Fu Panda" spins the tale of an unlikely savior who finds that becoming the best version of himself is the true hero's path.

For Black's Po the panda, a tubby behemoth destined to become a martial-arts master, that meant playing on his strengths, such as using food as an incentive to learn his own variation of kung fu moves.

For chubby funnyman Black, the unlikely transition from character roles to leading man required a similar effort to define his own voice and persona on screen.

Before his breakout role as a condescending record-shop clerk in "High Fidelity," he had been more of a mimic than an actor, Black said. His side gig as a member of the music duo Tenacious D changed that.

"I was always trying to kind of imitate the actors that I liked. I was always kind of just doing what I thought the great actors would do," Black said in an interview at the Cannes Film Festival. "And then I found my own voice when I wrote songs and sketches for Tenacious D. I was just being me. I wasn't trying to be somebody else, like John Malkovich or whoever my favorite actor was at the time. And that came through with 'High Fidelity' for the first time. It was just me doing my thing."

Black, 38, previously dabbled in animation as a tiger in "Ice Age" and a vegetarian shark in "Shark Tale," the latter played as "kind of a nebishy New Yorker, Woody Allentype," he recalled. For "Kung Fu Panda," DreamWorks Animation boss Jeffrey Katzenberg wanted the real Black — his own voice, his own personality.

"In a way, I feel like this is the most satisfied I've been with a role," Black said. "Where a lot of times, on most movies, I have a lot of leftover stuff that I didn't feel I totally nailed as much as I wanted to. I had no regrets on this one, though."

After stealing all his scenes in "High Fidelity," Black grabbed lead roles in such films as "Shallow Hal," "The School of Rock," "Nacho Libre" and "King Kong."

"I would definitely have been satisfied if I could have a career character-actor trajectory," Black said. "Even when I was doing 'High Fidelity,' I wasn't thinking, 'Oh, this could be a great stepping-stone to getting the lead role in feature films.' That was never the goal. Those doors just sort of opened after 'High Fidelity,' which was great but definitely beyond my dreams." DAVID GERMAIN (AP)

First Among Second Bananas

Harvey Korman may not have been a star, but he always shined

SUPPORTING | In comedy as in dance, there is an art to partnering: It takes strength and grace, a willingness to step back, to blend. It is harder than it is supposed to look. Harvey Korman, who died Thursday at the age of 81, made a career out of helping other people look good. The very definition of a supporting actor, he won four Emmys (out of six nominations) and a Golden Globe (out of four) not drawing attention to himself.

Playing opposite the long-limbed and explosive Carol Burnett, on whose "The Carol Burnett Show" he spent a decade, he was an anchor. The oldest member of the ensemble, he was its authority figure.

Indeed, he seemed to carry the history of Hollywood around inside him, like a one-man Central Casting. This served him well in the films he made for Mel Brooks, the other pillar on which his reputation rests — "Blazing Saddles," "High Anxiety" and "History of the World, Part 1."

In 1978, he starred in "The Harvey Korman Show," which did not last long. He was not meant to stand out in front, but rather shoulder to shoulder. In his 70s, he toured a stage show, "Tim Conway and Harvey Korman: Together Again" — a partner first and last. ROBERT LLOYD (LOS ANGELES TIMES)

Co-opting Truthiness

David Sedaris' new book meanders but delivers some gems

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL | For years, David Sedaris has written so many wry and sometimes wacky stories about his life that any longtime fan might certainly ask: C'mon, how much of this really happened? That question came to the fore last year, when an article in the New Republic said his nonfiction sometimes goes beyond exaggeration to outright fabrication. So, before you plunge into the 22 essays in his new book, "When You Are Engulfed in Flames" — most republished from elsewhere — you might check out the author's note. "The events described in these stories," it says, "are realish." Huh? "That's a good word," Sedaris told the Christian Science Monitor recently. "I guess I've always thought that if 97 percent of the story is true, then that's an acceptable formula." So, be warned. And then prepare to laugh. Whether these stories really meet the 97 percent benchmark or not, they're a pleasure to read and funny. Or, at least, funnyish. We read Sedaris' innermost thoughts as he deals with airplane seat mates who are hostile, or crying uncontrollably, or surprisingly foul-mouthed ("It was as if they'd kidnapped the grandparents from a Ralph Lauren ad and forced them into a David Mamet play"). Some of these essays meander through time and topics like the streets of Venice, Italy, which Sedaris says were seemingly designed by ants. And some work better than others. His 2006 baccalaureate address at Princeton University, relating over-the-top stories about his life on campus, is just a little too silly. But Sedaris' fans will forgive him the occasional disappointment in this, his sixth book. And first-timers will easily see what has made him a best-selling humorist, if not a strict historian. "People aren't buying my books or showing up [at personal appearances] because they think every word is true," Sedaris told Newsday last year. "They're showing up because they want to laugh." This book will meet that goal. Honest. MALCOLM RITTER (AP)

HUMOR IS TRUTH, TRUTH IS HUMOR: David Sedaris sticks to the facts — sort of.

Opera is alive and well — and it has a social conscience

OPERA | Italian composer Giorgio Battistelli says he believes operatic treatment of Al Gore's film "An Inconvenient Truth" will help people see the world's environmental predicament from a fresh point of view.

"Opera makes you reflect," he said in an interview Friday. He is working on an opera based on Gore's book and film about climate change.

He began work on the opera a year ago, and the Milan opera house La Scala plans to present it during the 2011 season.

"I thought it could be a good idea to deal on this important occasion with a subject that involves not only Italy but the world," Battistelli said.

The opera will be told through

Return to 'Mole'

Reality show gets new life, but no new twists or surprises

COMPETITION | After a four-year hiatus, ABC dusts off "The Mole" (10 p.m., ABC) for a fifth season. This arrives just one night after CBS exhumed "Password" for prime time.

For those who don't remember, "The Mole" unfolds like "Survivor" with a traitor in the ranks. Players must compete in games of strength and skill but keep their eyes on the one player they believe is the "mole" in the midst, out to sabotage their ability to win prizes. At the end of each of the 10 episodes, the player who is able to answer the fewest questions about the "mole" is eliminated, or "executed," in the charming terminology of the game.

Viewers may recall that after two installments of "The Mole," the game gave way to "Celebrity Mole," a lower circle of has-been Hades that "D-list" star Kathy Griffin ("Celebrity Mole: Hawaii") has long since turned into stand-up fodder. But not all "Mole" veterans have become punch lines. The first American installment of "The Mole" was hosted by Anderson Cooper, now a fixture of "serious" TV journalism over at CNN. KEVIN MCDONOUGH (UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE)

Americans are finding hot and spicy cuisines more approachable

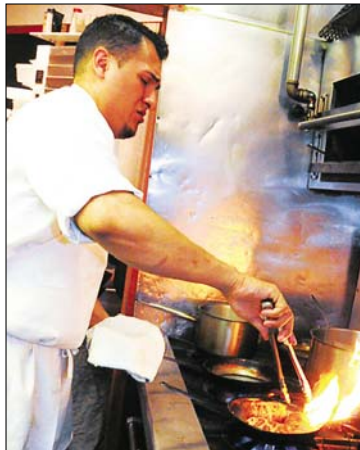

When he first immigrated to the U.S. from the Ivory Coast 19 years ago, Morou Outtara used a delicate hand when working the flavors of his homeland into the menus of the restaurants where he cooked.

Americans, he suspected, weren't quite ready for bold West African flavors like alligator peppers or creamy palm nut sauces that were common in his mother's home.

But as he saw diners grow more comfortable with assertive Asian and Indian seasonings, Outtara decided it was time to let African flavors play a more dominant role in his menus.

So, 18 months ago, he opened his upscale Farrah Olivia restaurant in Alexandria, Va., where comfortable dishes such as a rib eyes are rubbed with ground coffee and pungent and spicy West African peppercorns called grains of paradise, and where beignets are stuffed with a mash of black-eyed peas.

"We explored the Asian rim thing, and the Indian has been here forever," he says of the evolving American palate. "For six, seven years now, people are playing with the idea of African food, and people are now starting to accept it."

Flavors of Africa

Once limited mostly to immigrant enclaves, the robust flavors of African cuisines recently have begun following the trajectories of Italian, Latin, Asian and Middle Eastern foods — themselves once foreign flavors here.

"It's one of the last frontiers," says Kemp Minifie, executive food editor at Gourmet magazine. "As there is more awareness and more learning about Africa and that it isn't just one cuisine, there will be more restaurants doing it."

Americans' appetite for newer, bolder flavors paired with foreign travel and awareness of global issues have made for easy incorporation of

“It's one of the last frontiers. As there is more awareness ... there will be more restaurants [serving African cuisines].”

KEMP MINIFIE, GOURMET MAGAZINE

African flavors into new markets.

Until recently, for example, the editors at Food & Wine magazine felt it necessary to suggest substitutes whenever a recipe called for harissa, a spicy sauce from Tunisia. Today it is common enough to stand on its own.

The cuisines of several African nations in particular seem to be benefiting. According to a recent survey by consumer research firm Packaged Facts, Moroccan, Tunisian, Algerian and Egyptian foods are especially poised to gain wider appeal.

In some parts of the country — Washington, Minneapolis, New York and Chicago — the trend is helped by large immigrant communities of Ethiopians and Somalians, says food consultant

Elaine Tecklenburg, who authored the report.

There also has been an influx of African refugees, many of them settling in rural areas and creating a demand for foods from home.

Census figures show more than a million African-born refugees and immigrants were living in the U.S. in 2002, more than double the number from a decade earlier.

It also helps that Americans are finding the flavor profile of many African cuisines — hot, spicy and sweet — approachable, in part because it's a trio found in other already popular cuisines, such as Hispanic. PERVAIZ SHALLWANI (AP)

South of the Border Sips

Drinks

Brews from Mexico quench Americans' thirst for light beer

No doubt there once existed a truly Mexican style of beer, brewed in a tradition that, through centuries of trial and error, fine-tuned indigenous ingredients and local conditions into perfect harmony.

Unfortunately, we'll never taste it.

Each and every invading force, from the Spanish conquistadors to Maximilian, apparently decided they could do better than what the locals were pouring. And perhaps as a result, we've been left with a grafting of someone else's beer preference onto climate, soil and water conditions that never quite suited it.

European-style pilseners. American-style lagers. All of it made in Mexico — none of it really "from" there.

Mexican beers are so popular that American companies now sell similar brews.

So what? Stick a lime in it and drink up, amigo. Your average beer snob is not shopping for a sixer south of the border, anyway.

"Corona, Modelo, Sol, Dos Equis — these aren't the world's great lagers. ... They're more for what you associate them with," says Christina Perozzi, who, as a beer sommelier at Rustic Canyon restaurant in Santa Monica, Calif., and author of the beer blog Beer4chicks.com, qualifies as a bona fide beer snob if anyone does.

“These aren't the world's great lagers. ... They're more for what you associate them with.”

CHRISTINA PEROZZI, BEER SOMMELIER

Not that there's anything wrong with that.

The best-selling import beer in the U.S., by far, is Corona Extra. Its far-trailing Mexican competitors — Modelo, Tecate, Pacifico — all have reported growth during the past five years. So has Dos Equis, which recently launched a massive new stateside marketing campaign.

Mexico's beers are moving so consistently well here that even domestic beer giants Miller and Anheuser Busch took a shot at the growing market this year with citrus-and-salt-flavored offerings Miller Chill and Bud Light Lime.

These may not be aromatic Oregon microbrews or German beer-law adherents, but they're consistent in one way, at least — each is light, low in alcohol and decidedly unserious, always agreeable on a summer's day.

And while each has built-in brand recognition among the roaring Hispanic population, their target drinkers, for the most part, are American-born.

One trend that Mexican brewers have left largely unplumbed: the previous decade's explosion of craft beer. A precious few microbrewers have sprung up in Mexico, and none has yet gained a significant foothold in the U.S.

Perozzi, whose mind is a virtual database of exotic beers from around the world, struggles to think of one.

After a moment's pause: "I've had the Tijuana beer, and that's really good," she says. "They make something like an American amber. The Tijuana Morena, that's it."

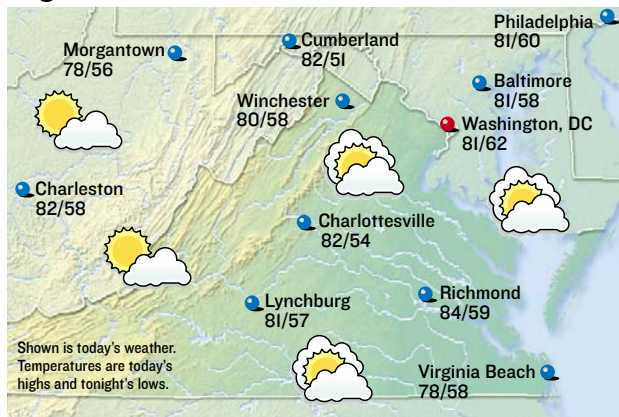

She also cops to an affinity for Negro Modelo, the darker-hued cousin to the No. 2 best-selling Mexican beer, Modelo Especial.

"It's the only one that has some toastiness to it," she says. "It has a better balance than the lagers," which always seem to be overpowered by minerality. JOSH L. DICKEY (AP)

Runway Hits Roadway

Meet the Bugatti Veyron Fbg par Hermes, a $2.4 million, 253 mph, 1,001-horsepower hypercar, a collaboration between Bugatti and Hermes' elves on the Rue du Faubourg Saint-Honore.

Go ahead and inhale the excess: the two-tone, ebony-and-brick bull calfskin interior; the saddle-stitched steering wheel (requiring 30 hours of handwork); the wheel locks branded with the signature H; the door handles borrowed from an Hermes valise; an Hermes wallet fitted to the glove box; and special luggage for the trunk.

Unveiled at Geneva's auto show in March, the Veyron par Hermes will be available by special order to no more than 15 customers worldwide by year's end. Yet the wait is shorter than that for a Birkin bag.

The Veyron Fbg par Hermes is the latest and most lavish of a recent slew of low-volume fashion-auto-maker collaborations — Lamborghini and Versace; Cadillac and Bulgari; Mercedes-Benz and Armani; Alfa Romeo and Costume National — that celebrate the awesome power of rich people to get anything they want. Call it car-ture.

"Even with a car as special as the Veyron, some customers have expressed a wish for even greater personalization. The Hermes allows us to give it to them," says Alasdair Stewart, sales director for Bugatti.

You see, high net worth types have a problem. Some of the world's most prestigious brands — Louis Vuitton, Cartier, Dior — have sunk into mass-class ubiquity, so it's hard to tell who's rich and who's just overextended. Another problem for the rich: There are just too many of them. In 1986, Forbes magazine identified 140 billionaires around the world. The 2008 survey listed 1,125 billionaires. The growing ranks of the ultra-wealthy puts pressure on prestige brands to be more exclusive. "These people say, 'I want the best. I can afford the best. I want it to be mine, and ... I want people to know it,'" says Wes Brown, principal of the Los Angeles marketing research firm Iceology.

The growing ranks of the ultra-wealthy puts pressure on prestige brands to be more exclusive.

While the stock Lamborghini Murcielago LP640 might be fine for some people — mere millionaires — it's a bit quotidian for the extremely wealthy. If you're one of these unfortunates, your luck is turning. Last year, Lamborghini offered the Versace Lamborghini Murcielago LP640 edition. The top-grain, vegetable-dyed leathers and stitched Greek fret motifs in the Lambo are the same used on Versace's furniture.

"Brands are people," says Freeman Thomas, Ford's director of design. "These designers, for better or worse, have tremendous authority." DAN NEIL (LOS ANGELES TIMES)

Beauty

Snake Charm

When "lip venom" became all the rage a few years ago, we were skeptical. It sounded so medieval: basting your lips with snake venom in order to puff them up. "Women also used to paint their faces with arsenic!" we cried. But lip venom did sort of work. Now there's DuWop's CHEEK VENOM ($24, Sephora), which works differently. Instead of plumping (Can cheeks be "plumped"?) it claims to hydrate and to cause a natural blush. And it does. For the first 10 minutes or so, you'll look like you're in a high school production of "Private Lives," but after the first flush (ha) wears off, the color mellows into a long-lasting glowy pink. FIONA ZUBLIN (EXPRESS)

Beauty

Fresh Breeze

Estee Lauder does what it does very well. It's been making variations of its PURE WHITE LINEN fragrance ($35, Estelauder.com) since it premiered in 1978, and it's not musty yet. It's classic and lovely, in a Park Avenue sort of way. There are hints of grapefruit and ginger that fade into a gentle cedar scent, with just a hint of freshly printed money. This is a perfume for classy women — or those who just want to smell classy. Estee Lauder has added a few fun elements to its traditional scent, perhaps to cash in on the funky fashion sense that will have overtaken women drunk on the shopping montages of "Sex and the City: The Movie." But the fragrance can't really change its stripes. Luckily, it was nice to begin with. F.Z.

Scott McClellan

Former White House press secretary SCOTT MCCLELLAN was online Friday to discuss his new book, "What Happened: Inside the Bush White House and Washington's Culture of Deception," and the administration and media reactions to it.

You wrote that the liberal press had been complacent with the administration regarding the war in Iraq. What was the cause of this, in your opinion, and how can this be avoided in the future?

I believe the overall emphasis of the national media was on the march to war. I think the media have learned lessons from that experience and have taken some steps to not let it happen again.

Were you prepared for all the negative criticism that your book would create with all the Bush supporters?

I expected much of it. The White House would have preferred that I not discuss my experiences openly. As someone who was raised in a family that believes strongly in public service, I felt it was important to speak up.

While defending himself against your charges in an interview on FOX, Karl Rove said your claims demonstrated just how out of the loop you were on important decisions. Did you consider yourself out of the loop?

In the book, I discuss this very sentiment that existed among some Bush advisers. I participated in many presidential meetings. But this White House has been too secretive and too compartmentalized. The book covers this in pretty good detail.

'Sex' Question Offensive

I FOUND EXPRESS' May 28 poll question, "Can women alone make the 'Sex and the City' movie a box office success?" sexist. Such a question would never be asked about the hyper-masculine films being released this year, such as "The Incredible Hulk" or "Indiana Jones." The idea that a film that doesn't include men in its target audience or is not centered on a male cannot be successful (or that women who enjoy such films are lonely man-haters, as some of those who responded to the poll suggest) is completely baseless.
