New Era Starts for U.S., U.K.

Brown seeks to solidify ties on first visit to Washington

WASHINGTON | Prime Minister Gordon Brown traveled to the United States on Sunday, saying he planned to use the official visit to strengthen what Britain already considers its "most important bilateral relationship."

"It is a relationship that is founded on our common values of liberty, opportunity and the dignity of the individual," Brown said in a statement. "And because of the values we share, the relationship with the United States is not only strong, but can become stronger in the years ahead."

Brown, making his first visit to the U.S. as Britain's new leader, also denied speculation that the bilateral relationship was cooling.

His predecessor, Tony Blair, was often accused at home of being too compliant with the policies of President Bush, especially regarding the Iraq war.

Some analysts have urged Brown to be more like Prime Ministers Margaret Thatcher and Winston Churchill, who had close ties with the U.S. but remained frank about their own goals and policies.

Brown makes his first major overseas trip buoyed by a surprising degree of public support after impressing many with his sober handling of the terror plots in London and Glasgow. But questions abound over whether the intellectual Brown will kindle Blair's chemistry with Bush. DAVID STRINGER (AP)

Study: Tropical Storms on the Rise

Researchers say jump over the last century is tied to climate change

WASHINGTON | The number of tropical storms developing annually in the Atlantic Ocean more than doubled over the past century, with the increase taking place in two jumps, researchers say.

The increases coincided with rising sea surface temperature, largely the by-product of human-induced climate warming, researchers Greg J. Holland and Peter J. Webster con-

WEATHER PATTERNS

→ From 1905 to 1930, the Atlantic-Gulf Coast area averaged six tropical cyclones per year, with four of those storms growing to become hurricanes, the study said.

→ From 1995 to 2005, the average had risen to 15 tropical storms per year and eight hurricanes annually.

→ Even in 2006, widely reported cal storms recorded.

as a mild year, there were 10 tropicluded. Their findings were being published online Sunday by Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society of London.

"We are currently in an upward swing in frequency of named storms and hurricanes that has not stabilized," Holland said.

Chris Landsea, science and operations officer at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's National Hurricane Center, said the study is inconsistent in its use of data.

The work, he said, is "sloppy science that neglects the fact that better monitoring by satellites allows us to observe storms and hurricanes that were simply missed earlier. The doubling in the number of storms and hurricanes in 100 years that they found ... is just an artifact of technology, not climate change."

But Kerry Emanuel, a hurricane expert at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said the study was significant. "It refutes recent suggestions that the upward trend in Atlantic hurricane activity is an artifact of changing measurement systems," Emanuel said . RANDOLPH E. SCHMID (AP)

Also crippling the efforts are anemic capital spending by Iraq's central government ministries and its provinces; continued challenges faced by contractors; and endemic corruption. (AP)

Republicans Backing New Iraq Plan

Legislation would limit missions but set no date for withdrawal

WASHINGTON | Republicans are increasingly backing a new approach in the Iraq war that would narrowly limit missions for U.S. troops but let President Bush decide when troops should leave.

So far, the idea has not attracted the attention of Democratic leaders, who are under substantial pressure from anti-war groups to consider only legislation that orders troops out of Iraq.

But the limited missions approach quickly is becoming the attractive alternative for Republican lawmakers who want to challenge Bush on the unpopular war without backtracking from their past assertions that it would be disastrous to set deadlines for troop withdrawals.

"This is a necessary adjustment in the national debate to reintroduce bipartisanship, to stop the "Settling Sunni-Shiite rivalries over who occupies what street in Baghdad is not in the vital interest of the United States," said Rep. Heather Wilson of New Mexico. "And we should only have Americans in harm's way where there are U.S. interests at stake."

Thrilling Soccer Win for Weary Iraq In Brief

Rare burst of unified revelry after Iraqi team triumphs in Asian Cup

BAGHDAD | Tens of thousands of Iragis from the Shiite south to the Kurdish-dominated north poured into the usually treacherous streets Sunday to celebrate a rare moment of joy and unity when the national team won Asia's most prestigious soccer tournament.

The revelers spanning the country's sectarian and ethnic divisions danced, sang and waved flags and posters of the team after Iraq beat three-time champion Saudi Arabia 1-0 to take the Asian Cup.

Chants of "Long live Iraq" and "Baghdad is victorious" rang out across the country as Iraqis basked in national pride. Some of the revelers - mostly men - took their shirts off to display the red, white and black colors of the Iraqi flag painted on their chests.

Within seconds of the final whistle, celebratory gunfire echoed across Baghdad and elsewhere despite a government ban and the threat of arrest by authorities.

At least four people were killed and scores wounded by the gunfire. But as night fell on the country, there were no reports of bombings such as those that killed at least 50 and wounded dozens in Baghdad during celebrations of Iraq's semifinal win over South Korea on Wednesday.

Authorities said they foiled a potential car bomber in southwestern Baghdad after he refused to stop at a checkpoint and appeared headed toward a crowd of revelers. Iraqi authorities had banned vehicles in and around the capital from shortly before the game began until early Monday to prevent a repeat of last week's violence.

in legislative election

TOKYO | Prime Minister Shinzo Abe's ruling coalition suffered one of its worst defeats ever in elections for parliament's upper house on Sunday, emboldening the opposition and raising serious questions about how long Abe would be able to remain in office.

Crippled by voter anger over a slew of scandals, Abe's Liberal Democratic Party – which has controlled Japan's government virtually uninterrupted since 1955 was projected to fall far short of the 64 seats it needed to hold a major林 丰 顕 正 鹿児島 崎 分 ity with its coalition partner in the 242-seat upper house.

The long-sidelined main opposition Democratic Party of Japan, meanwhile, made a huge gain, taking 60 of the 121 contested seats, to 37 for the LDP, according to final counts early Monday reported by Kyodo News agency.

Looking grim, Abe called the results "severe" but dismissed questions over whether he should resign. He also dismissed opposition calls for an election for the lower house to test his mandate.

"I must push ahead with reforms and continue to fulfill my responsibilities as prime minister," he said at the party's Tokyo headquarters. "The responsibility for this utter defeat rests with me."

Sunday's defeat came as a stunning reversal of fortune for a ruling party that Abe's predecessor, Junichiro Koizumi, led to a landslide in the last elections in 2005. (AP)

Mexico City Poised for a Makeover

Mayor betting small changes will help cut crime, shift attitudes

MEXICO CITY | The mayor of crimeridden, smog-choked Mexico City is trying to do what some might consider impossible: transform his megalopolis into a place that's more healthy, livable and even fun.

And despite much skepticism, initiatives such as "urban beaches" and outdoor movies have become a wild success.

Mexico's capital of nearly 20 million people exemplifies chaos. Its potholed streets are snarled by more than 4 million drivers each day. The city is notorious for "express kidnappings," in which victims are forced to drain their bank accounts from automated tellers at gunpoint. Millions live in cement hovels with little running water.

Since taking office in December, Mayor Marcelo Ebrard has imposed tougher traffic rules to make pedestrians safer, installed security cameras in high-crime neighborhoods and required city staffers to ride their bicycles to work once a month.

The city trucked in sand to build "urban beaches" at seven public pools, screened outdoor movies and inaugurated "bicycle Sundays" when thousands of cyclists, skaters and pedestrians take over the main avenues.

The mayor's goal is transforming the city into Latin America's latest model of urban renewal. The big idea behind these relatively inexpensive measures is that by encouraging happiness, rather than solely economic growth, he just might change residents' view of their city — and themselves.

So far, residents are packing the urban beaches and, on Sundays, the city's famous tree-lined Reforma Avenue.

Small things can make a big difference, said Jorge Melindez, 41, who brought his three children to bike down the normally congested main thoroughfare.

"It's so stressful living here, and this gives us a break after screaming at cars all week," Melindez said. "This doesn't take time away from confronting the problems. In fact, it helps so we can confront them."

Ebrard's efforts may even restore the popularity of his battered, leftist Democratic Revolutionary Party, whose losing presidential candidate, Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador, alienated supporters with election protests that clogged the city streets for months last year. JULIE WATSON (AP)

Straight to Video

Video cell phones are making strides but aren't perfect yet

TECH TEST | My cell phone flickered to life in the middle of a rowdy party, and seconds later, my fiancee's face brightened up the screen.

"Sorry I couldn't make it," she said. "I wish I was there."

She wasn't physically at the party, but her presence was felt, thanks to AT&T Inc.'s new Video Share service. The service, which AT&T claims is the first to pipe live video from one cell phone to another, worked well.

Still, you can't quite call it a "video phone" because Video Share is only a one-way link, meaning one party can see the other but not vice versa at the same time.

AT&T started offering Video Share last week to most of its 160 markets. It works on only four phone models so far — iPhone users need not apply — and only when the phones are within range of the company's 3G network.

The phones cost anywhere from $25 to $130 [with rebates], and the service costs about 35 cents per minute. Two plans offer cheaper options — one with 25 minutes for $4.99 per month and another with 60 min### utes for $9.99 per month.

It's fairly simple to use. Once a call between two Video Share-capable phones is connected, a prompt appears if both are in AT&T's 3G network. The caller who decides to initiate the connection controls the video camera, and both phones instantly snap into speaker mode.

We tried it out using the Samsung A717, a snazzy flip-phone. Among the kinks, the sound coming from the phone's speaker was nearly impossible to hear in a noisy or crowded setting. We also found it was sometimes frustratingly difficult to stay connected. Even when both phones were receiving strong signals, the video link occasionally dropped out, particularly when one of the callers was indoors.

The video reception also can be halting or pixelated in some instances, like streaming a Web video on a less than blazing Internet connection. GREG BLUESTEIN (AP)

FAST FORWARD

In my Yahoo e-mail account, I get a lot of messages with things like text.pdf or doc.pdf attached. I never recognize the names, so I just delete them. Is this something new, or are the PDFs a virus? Yeah, it's some kind of virus going around. Thank you for being smart and skeptical about random attachments.

I'm going to buy the AVG Security Suite for my desktop and notebook, both Vista. Would you keep the ## Vista Firewall or install the AVG Firewall?

I would keep the Vista firewall. I don't like most third-party firewalls; they always seem to make local-network file sharing even glitchier than usual, they nag you more than the Windows firewall, and they don't provide any more protection against incoming threats.

If I have some virus loose on my computer, keeping it bottled up inside my own copy of Windows is no solution at all.

Can you elaborate on the transition to digital television? Many in this country are still unaware that analog sets will no longer be able to receive a signal after February ### 2009. Can you shed some light on how this is going to play out?

What you said is correct: Analog broadcasts will die on Feb. 17, 2009. The FCC has a pretty good site about the transition: www.dtv.gov. This analog cutoff is why I've been yammering for years about the evils of TVs and other video devices that only include analog, NTSC tuners. The industry has finally caught up with that reality, but not before millions of customers have bought hardware that's going to be awfully inadequate in 2009.

Dead Birds Prompt Metro Closings

Suspected pest poison forces shutdown of 3 stations in D.C., Md.

WASHINGTON | Three Metro train stations were briefly closed Sunday while hazardous materials crews investigated dozens of dead birds and a substance believed to be a commercial pest poison.

All signs point to a contractor making a mistake, said a spokeswoman for the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority. The poison was spread outside at least six Metro stations.

The FBI's joint terrorism task force and officials from the National Institutes of Health joined the investigation as reports of the dead birds increased during the day.

"There is no indication at this point that this is an attack that has been aimed at people or anything like that." Alan Etter, D.C. fire and EMS spokesman. said

Information on the substance was preliminary because it had been washed away by wind and rain. The Greenbelt station in Maryland and the Rhode Island Avenue station in Washington reopened after brief closures, Smith said. The Takoma station remained closed until early evening, she said.

Twenty dead birds were found outside the Greenbelt station, 15 at the Branch Avenue station and a few at other stations.

The issue raised public safety concerns because while many of the birds died on the spot, others may have ingested the substance and flown elsewhere, Etter said.

We don't know how many dead birds are going to be connected to this. The message to the public is if you see a dead bird, don't touch it, and contact the authorities," he said. LUBNA TAKRURI (AP)

Va. Tech Considers Classroom Locks

BLACKSBURG, VA. | Safety experts say that while school officials across the nation re-evaluate campus safety in the aftermath of the Virginia Tech tragedy, many are overlooking a simple solution: putting locks on the inside of classroom doors. "Often it's the simple stuff that will prevent a tragedy like this, and often it's the simpler things that will make the bigger difference," said Michael Dorn, a campus safety consultant and author of 19 books on the topic. "It's not the complex systems that cost millions of dollars."

Most classrooms, including those at Virginia Tech, lock only by key and from the outside.

Virginia Tech spokesman Larry Hincker said a school committee looking into security changes is considering installation of interior locks. "Right now there's nothing off the table, nothing on the table. It's definitely a consideration," he said. At Virginia Tech, that would involve about 170 general-use classrooms spread across 2,600 acres.

The door of Room 204 in Va. Tech's Norris Hall, which has no doorknob

Still, some question whether changes are necessary. "This is a fluke of an incident, and school security shouldn't have to be changed because of it," said Clay Violand, whose French teacher and 11 classmates were killed at Virginia Tech.

Violand, 21, an international studies major, will return to Virginia Tech this fall.

So will Derek O'Dell, a 20-yearold biological science major, who was shot in one arm when he and some classmates barricaded the door to Room 207 of Norris Hall with his shoe and their bodies.

"I know I lost four of my friends in that class, and there are countless other individuals who lost their lives. There's so much hope that they had and it's all just ended," O'Dell said. "Just increasing security, like a simple door lock, could almost prevent that." (AP)

Principal Vacancies Abound In D.C. Public Schools

At Eaton Elementary School in Northwest last week, nearly 100 parents and school staff members showed up at a meeting with people vying for the principal's job. At the end of the forum, parents cast paper ballots and one parent collected comments. When a 12-member selection panel met to formally interview the candidates the next morning, it had a strong sense of how parents and staff members viewed the hopefuls. City policy calls for principal candidates to be interviewed by a cross-section of school and community members. The schools chancellor makes the final decision. (AP)

Ripken Takes Place in Immortality

Emotional 'Iron Man' represents the best of times entering Hall

BASEBALL | Cal Ripken Jr. and Tony Gwynn took their place in baseball's shrine Sunday, saluted as much for their Hall of Fame careers as their character off the field.

Commissioner Bud Selig and a record crowd came to cheer them and all that was good about the game. A continent away, a different scene played out. Barry Bonds failed to tie the home run record, a chase tainted by his surly nature and a steroids investigation.

Ripken and Gwynn sensed that poignant counterpoint on their induction day.

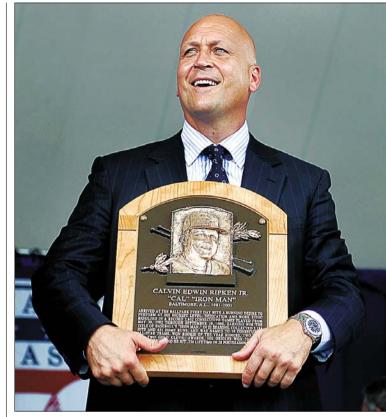

"This day shouldn't be all about us," Ripken said. "Today is about celebrating the best that baseball has been and the best it can be. This is a symbol it's alive, popular."

"Whether you like it or not, as big leaguers, we are role models," he said. "The only question is, will it be positive or will it be negative?"

Gwynn offered the same sentiment.

"I think the fans felt comfortable enough in us, they could trust us and how we played the game, especially in this era of negativity," he said. "I don't think there's any question about that."

This Year, Lloyd Eyes a Passing Grade

Receiver bulks up his legs after his troubles catching on with team

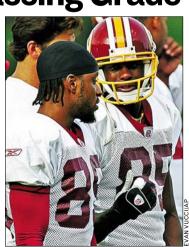

REDSKINS | Brandon Lloyd's muscular legs were on full display.

Instead of the fashionable baggy burgundy shorts worn by nearly all the Washington Redskins players on the second day of training camp, Lloyd went old school. His tighter, shorter gray shorts made for a hardto-miss advertisement for the bulk he added during the offseason.

Lloyd needed to do something. Last year, he was perhaps the most underachieving receiver in the NFL, and he is paying the price. He opened camp as the No. 3 receiver instead of No. 2, having fallen behind Antwaan Randle El on the depth chart.

Lloyd was thrown 57 passes and caught only 23 last season — a meager success rate of 40 percent. No one else in the NFL who was thrown so many passes caught so few. By contrast, Randle El caught half of the passes tossed his way.

Lloyd didn't score a touchdown all season and lost his starting job late in the year after an in-game, helmet-throwing tantrum that prompted two meetings with coach Joe Gibbs within a week. The two had another long meeting in the offseason.

"We just talked over generally what he means to the club and what his future is here," Gibbs said. "We had a good sit-down. We're expecting him to make a real impact on our team."

Lloyd caught a nice sideline pass for a touchdown from Jason Campbell during Saturday's practice, prompting cheers from fans that hope the receiver actually might pay dividends on his contract.

"I'm going to get my share of passes," Lloyd said. "And whatever I need to do to help the team, I'll do it." JOSEPH WHITE (AP)

Spaniard Alberto Contador of Team Discovery Channel celebrates his victory in the Tour de France Sunday. He edged Australia's Cadel Evans by only 23 seconds.

Contador Wins Tour de Scandal

Spaniard takes yellow jersev in race marred by doping controversy

TOUR DE FRANCE | Alberto Contador won the doping-scarred Tour de France on Sunday, a new, young and unlikely winner for the threeweek race shaken to its core by scandals

The 24-year-old rider for the American Discovery Channel team was the youngest champion since Jan Ullrich of Germany in 1997. He also was the first Spaniard to win the crown since Miguel Indurain won the last of his five titles in 1995.

His margin of victory - just 23 seconds ahead of Cadel Evans of Australia – was the second-narrowest in the Tour's 104-year history. "It's an extraordinary joy," said Contador, who kissed his winner's vellow jersey on the podium and thrust his arms ecstatically, the Arc de Triomphe in the background.

Contador had seemed destined for second place until the Tour was hit by a bombshell just five days from the finish: the ouster of race leader Michael Rasmussen. His Rabobank team accused the Dane of having lied about his whereabouts before the Tour to evade doping controls. JAMEY KEATEN (AP)

Henman Leggs Out Return

In the twilight of his career, 2004 champ is unseeded in D.C. event

TENNIS | There are plenty of reasons it would make sense for Tim Henman to stop playing professional tennis: losses, injuries, age, fatherhood.

There is, however, one big reason he's still on tour: love of the game.

"I'm aware of it — that I'm much closer to the end of my career than I am to the beginning," the 32-yearold said Sunday at the Legg Mason Tennis Classic. "But ... I want to enjoy the opportunities that I've got."

Henman will face NCAA singles runner-up John Isner on Tuesday or Wednesday.

For Henman and others, this week represents a chance to begin building up to the U.S. Open, which starts Aug. 27. In the past, he stayed can spend time with his wife and two daughters, who are 2 and 4.

So, he's at the stage where he's balancing family time with court time — while trying to get his game going again. It's telling that Henman, the 2004 champion, isn't seeded at Legg Mason.

Once ranked No. 4, Henman was No. 71 last week — in part because of a lack of activity in 2007, and in part because of a lack of success when he did play.

His record is 5-9, with seven consecutive tournament losses during one stretch. That's after being sidelined four months with a right knee injury.

"I wanted it to be 100 percent when I returned and — touch wood — I haven't had any issues," Henman said. "I'm just trying to get back into the rhythm of playing tournaments and, obviously, the more matches I play, the better." HOWARD FENDRICH (AP)

VICTORY: Tony Stewart plants a kiss on the bricks on Sunday after winning his second Indianapolis Motor Speedway race.

Stewart Cruises to Win at Brickyard

Driver is dominating in 2nd career victory on hometown track

AUTO RACING | After years of torment, Tony Stewart has mastered his beloved hometown track.

Stewart scored his second career victory at Indianapolis Motor Speedway, dominating Sunday at the place that caused him a decade of heartache and once even threatened his career.

But he found peace at the Brickyard with his electric 2005 breakthrough victory and this time made it look easy. Stewart led a race-high 66 of the 160 laps, but was passed by 2003 winner Kevin Harvick on a restart with 20 to go.

He never panicked as he chased down Harvick, even taunting his friend over the radio. "Here, kitty, kitty, kitty," he called. "Come get you some of this."

Stewart frantically pumped his fist through the window as he crossed the finish line at his beloved race track. After a brief victory lap, he stopped his car on the Yard of Bricks, was embraced by his father, Nelson, and his Joe Gibbs Racing crew. The team then joined him for his celebratory fence climb. ## Mets Rain Over Nationals in Finale

Washington never gets started in game shortened by weather

NATIONALS | With the rain coming down steadily and no end in sight, John Maine knew he had to be efficient. It's a good thing he was.

The Mets starter made quick work of Washington, allowing only a first-inning single in five innings, and New York salvaged a four-game split with a 5-0 victory over the Nationals on Sunday shortened to 41% innings by rain.

Ramon Castro made sure the Mets didn't miss All-Star catcher Paul Lo Duca, who strained his right hamstring Saturday night and was unavailable. The backup catcher went 2-for-2 with a home run, a double and two RBIs.

Despite occasional downpours, intermittent thunder and even a few flashes of lightning, officials seemed hesitant to call the game, perhaps because this was the Nationals' last visit to Shea Stadium before

New York's Alex Rodriguez, seeking his 500th home run, went 0-for-STAYING LIVE: Bands tend to mellow out as their members get older. But not Slayer. Its metal is as heavy now as it ever was.

Tested Metal

After almost three decades, Slayer is as hardcore as ever

TIMELESS | Few heavy metal bands stay intact and active for 25 years. Fewer still manage to retain the same level of intensity and energy throughout a career that long. Slayer is one of metal's exceptions: The band sounds just as furious and tight as it did in 1982. "I don't really think we've ever been tempted to mellow out or anything like that, actually," said bassist/vocalist Tom Araya. "We just play fast and brutal and go out there and kick some ass. That's what I like about us."

Slayer's latest studio album, "Christ Illusion," which was released last summer and just reissued on July 24 in a deluxe edition, is one of the band's strongest and heaviest to date. The CD contains the band's first Grammy-winning track, "Eyes of the Insane," a dark song that tells the true tale of a soldier who committed suicide.

"I got the idea for it, the lyrics, after reading this article in a Texas magazine — Texas Monthly, I think," said Araya. "It was about this soldier who was supposed to be coming home, and his family was concerned and they kept trying to talk to the military about it, but they had to go through all this bureaucratic bull. They had to keep trying to get the military to take them seriously. No one was keeping an eye on him, and he should have been on suicide watch. It's something they should have been able to prevent. I was thinking about it a lot, and the article really hit me, so I wrote the lyrics that night."

Despite the fact that guitarist Kerry King notoriously told Sun-Sentinel.com last February that the track was "one of the poorest representations of us on the record," Araya is proud of the track and the Grammy.

Slayer recently began a large tour co-headlining with controversial rocker Marilyn Manson, which stops at the Merriweather Post Pavilion tonight.

"When I heard that Manson would be willing to do the tour and thought about the idea, my first thought was, "That's interesting." And that's all, really — just 'interesting," Araya admitted with a laugh. "But I think it's going to be cool. We're just going to go out there every night and go all-out and kick ass. I'm not going to go out there and ask people to have a good time. We don't ask people for attention; we just go out there and demand it by going all-out with our energy." GREG RE (EXPRESS)

Beautiful Music by Billy Bob

Thornton's latest album reaffirms his talent as a musician

MUSIC | Like many of his fellow actors, Billy Bob Thornton moonlights as a musician. Unlike many of his counterparts, Thornton's music has quality and depth — as shown with his fourth album, "Beautiful Door."

Thornton co-wrote all 12 of the tracks on the country-rock disc. "Beautiful Door" opens with the melancholy, guitar-infused "It's Just Me" — a song about suicide. "That darkness that you feel each evening is just my lonely cry," Thornton croons with a twang. This subject is heavy, and the rest of the album is just as deep. On "Always Counting," Thornton sings about his obsessive-compulsive disorder. "Restin' Your Soul" is a song about the brokenhearted.

"Beautiful Door" is full of lowkey tracks, which, after a while, start to sound a bit monotonous. But there are a few standout upbeat songs such as the spirited single, "I Gotta Grow Up," in which Thornton sings, "Her head got small and her rage got big and she challenged me to a duel."

Each track is like a story, which is not surprising, considering Thornton is an Oscar-winning screenwriter. While the singing is simple, the well-written lyrics will inevitably draw the listener in.

Actor of Many Parts

Alfred Molina is an espionage master on TNT's new miniseries

ARTIST | Watching a bravura Alfred Molina performance is an expected delight, whether it's over-the-top villain Doc Ock in "Spider-Man 2" or artistic giant Diego Rivera in "Frida."

But Molina doesn't need an outsize role to impress; he's one of those actors who invariably finds something fresh and compelling in every character. Case in point: TNT's miniseries "The Company," a recounting of the Cold War from the vantage point of CIA and KGB spies. Molina plays U.S. espionage master Harvey Torriti, codenamed the Sorcerer, who serves as mentor to idealistic young recruit Jack McAuliffe (Chris O'Donnell). Michael Keaton co-stars in "The Company," which airs in two-hour chapters over three consecutive Sundays starting Aug. 5.

Torriti is hard-drinking and weary. He's also a wily, dedicated professional who takes no prisoners. "Shoot him, sport," he advises McAuliffe during a standoff with the enemy, a line that Molina delivers with canny cool.

The miniseries tracks the agents through the beginnings of the epic U.S.-USSR struggle and landmark events including the 1956 Hungarian Revolution and the Bay of Pigs to the collapse of the Soviet Union. It's based on Robert Littell's historical novel of the same name.

For Molina, the project's appeal wasn't just the broad sweep of history. He found himself sold by one element of a scene with Torriti (which, as can happen, ended up cut from the final version).

"There was a sequence where a great deal of attention was given to his cowboy boots, which he spoke about as he put his feet up on a desk," Molina recounted. "I just thought there was something so quietly subversive about that."

What can draw him to a part, he said, "isn't so much an overreaching or a comprehensive arc of a character's life. It could be just the way he plays that scene, the choice that the character makes in that scene. It can be as flimsy as that."

Torriti appealed to Molina on several levels: The character's the first spy Molina has played and was intriguing and a good fit.

"I'm 54 now, and I'm sort of at that age when actors start moving into a different generation of roles. I'm now playing fathers and uncles and bosses and the leading man's employer," he said. "I didn't want to be one of those actors hanging on to some kind of self-image [insisting], 'I want to be the snarling, sexy bad guy.""

"This role seemed to speak to me in terms of my own age, how I looked and, without sounding selfaggrandizing, my intelligence. It sounded like an interesting character, full of ambivalence and contradictions, and those are always the best to play." LYNN ELBER (AP)

Waiting on a Lifeline

Ben Harper and the Innocent Criminals make music in Paris

RECORD | Technically speaking, Ben Harper's new record, "Lifeline," due out Aug. 28 on Virgin, was recorded during a single lively week in the artist's Paris home base. But it was truly born during two months' worth of sound checks on a European tour by Harper and his band, the Innocent Criminals.

"It all hit me in a split second," Harper says. He explains that he was "basically tired of mundane sound checks. We were at the end of an eight-month run, about to start a two-month tour, and I thought, We own our own sound system, amps, speakers — everything you want when you're bringing music to life. But when you get to sound check, you're playing the same material. This can't stand.'"

So, Harper and his band hatched a plan: Each member would come to sound check with song ideas that they would refine before the show. "The operative term was 'acoustic soul," Harper says of the record's framework. "Soul' meaning anything from Motown to Blind Willie Johnson."

Post-tour, the band unloaded directly into Studio Gang in Paris, where it recorded "Lifeline" with enviable efficiency. "It's always been a dream of mine to make a record in

SOUL SINGER: On his forthcoming album, "Lifeline," Ben Harper and his band fuse a number of different genres while calling the central theme "acoustic soul."

Paris," Harper says. "And it's been a lifelong ambition to record right off the road — to get that raw, nasty sort of dazed, lethargic emotional release from the end of a tour on a record."

One could argue Harper's history casts him as the missing link between man and mixtape; previous albums, especially 2006's doubleheader "Both Sides of the Gun" and 2003's "Diamonds on the Inside," were as likely to find him digging around in groove rock as much as flight-worthy anthems and rubbery funk.

But "Lifeline" finds Harper and his Innocent Criminals — drummer Oliver Charles, percussionist Leon Mobley, bassist Juan Nelson, guitarist Michael Ward and keyboardist Jason Yates — at their most thematically united. Though there are tastes of gravel-road blues ("Needed You Tonight"), gospel ("Say You Will"), and subtle but sharp calls to arms ("Fight Outta You"), there's a certain organic unity to its sound.

This summer, the artist will play a handful of U.S. festivals, including the Virgin Festival in Baltimore Aug. 4. In the fall, Harper will descend on specially chosen theaters. JEFF VRABEL (BILLBOARD) baseball rosters, playing poker and hanging out at dive bars — make her just like one of the boys. At the end of last season, we catch P.J. and her longtime roommate and platonic pal Brendan (Reid Scott) locked in a romantic embrace. Will this change everything? I'll never tell.

P.J.'s miserably married brother (the affable everyman Jim Gaffigan) has moved to the suburbs, so now he can add commuting to his list of complaints. Her sportswriting rival, Bobby, has been "promoted" to covering NASCAR, but nobody seems to consider it a promotion or NAS-CAR a sport. Mike (Jamie Kaler) has settled too comfortably into unemployment, and the furtive Kenny (Michael Bunin) seems to have found himself a girl (Nicole Sullivan). ## Fuel-efficient electric vehicles are turning heads in drag racing Straddling a 619-pound motorcycle, Scotty Pollacheck tucks in his knees and lowers his head as he waits for the green light. When he revs the engine, there's no roar. The bike moves so fast that, within seconds, all that's visible is a faint red taillight melting in the distance.

Pollacheck crosses the quartermile marker going 156 mph; he's traveled 1,320 feet in 8.22 seconds, faster than any of the gas-powered cars, trucks or motorcycles that have raced in the drag sprints on this weekend at Portland International Raceway.

It's particularly impressive given Pollacheck is riding a vehicle that uses no gasoline and is powered entirely by lithium-ion batteries.

Electric vehicles are making ### their presence felt at amateur drag races across the country, challenging the dominance of gas-powered cars and motorcycles.

Pollacheck and his bike dubbed the KillaCycle — are part of a growing movement that's exploiting breakthroughs in battery technology and could soon challenge the world's fastest-accelerating vehicles in the $1 billion drag-racing industry.

"In professional drag racing, I expect to see the electrics eventually pass up the fuel dragsters," said Dick Brown, president of AeroBatteries, which sponsors White Zombie, the world's quickest-accelerating street-legal electric car - a 1972 white Datsun 1200.

"Electric gives you instant torque. whereas gasoline you have to build up," Brown said. "As we learn to manage it, you're going to see some really amazing performances."

Brown believes electric vehicles will challenge the top drag-racing records within five years.

The KillaCycle runs on 990 lithium-ion battery cells that feed two direct current motors, generating 350 horsepower.

The bike accelerates from zero to 60 mph in just under a second — faster than many professional gas-powered drag motorcycles and within striking distance of the quickest bikes that run on nitromethane.

Bill Dube, KillaCycle's owner and designer, likens the sleek, hulking bike to an oversized household appliance.

"This is like a giant cordless drill with wheels," said Dube, who Dube and other EV racers say electric cars aren't just about 2-cent-per-mile transportation, lessening reliance on foreign oil or curbing global warming. They're also about performance.

"For electric cars to matter, people have to buy them," he said. "If you have a car that is faster than everyone else's, if it's electric, so be it — but people will buy it." AARON CLARK (AP)

Creative evangelicals are finding inspiration in their Christian faith

There are no crosses in Makoto Fujimura's paintings. No images of Jesus gazing into the distance, or serene scenes of churches in a snow-cloaked wood.

Fujimura's abstract works speak to his evangelical Christian faith — but to find it takes some digging.

After the 2001 terrorist strikes on the World Trade Center, three blocks from Fujimura's home, his work explored the power of fire to both destroy and purify, themes drawn from the Christian Gospels and Dante's "The Divine Comedy."

"I am a Christian," said Fujimura, 46, who founded the nonprofit International Arts Movement. "I am also an artist and creative, and what I do is driven by my faith experience."

By making a name for himself in the secular art world, Fujimura has become a role model for creatively wired evangelicals in the United States. They believe that their churches have forsaken the visual arts for too long — and that a renaissance has begun.

These artistic evangelicals, though still relatively small in number, are striving to be creators of culture rather than imitators, said Dick Staub, a Seattle-based radio nature of evangelical visual culture is making people who have grown up in [it] thirsty for beauty."

talk show host.

"They want to make art that connects to everybody," Staub said.

That doesn't necessarily mean overtly religious art, but rather art informed by faith. Fujimura, for example, shares more with abstract expressionist Jackson Pollock than with artist Thomas Kinkade.

"The Bible is full of abstraction," said Fujimura. "In order to have faith, you have to reach out to something, to a mystery."

Evangelical unease with the visual arts dates to the Protestant Reformation of the 16th century. Andy Crouch, editorial director at Christianity Today, notes that Protestantism traces its origins to an era when noses were snapped off sculptures in a rejection of Catholic visual tradition.

National Weather for Monday, July 30

Attitudes began to change in the 1960s and '70s, when Christian theologian Francis Schaeffer and Dutch art historian Hans Rookmaaker challenged believers to emerge from their cocoons and engage the culture.

Now, Crouch said, those ideas are resonating with a younger generation of believers who live in an image-saturated culture.

"The very parched nature of evangelical visual culture is making people who have grown up in this culture thirsty for beauty," he said.

Increasingly, that ground is being explored on seminary campuses. One of the most ambitious examples is the Brehm Center for Worship, Theology and the Arts at Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, Calif.

Craig Detweiler, co-director of the center's Reel Spirituality Institute, said students are fascinated with finding the sacred in the mundane.

"For too long, Christian art has implied pale imitation," Detweiler said. "We're trying to get back to the days of the Renaissance, where the church was the patron of the finest art." ERIC GORSKI (AP)

bapper Hermes ties, above, always communicate strength. Below, Donald Trump cares more about his suit than about his hair. Obviously. Decay of the set of the se

Several weeks ago, Thomas J. Barrack Jr. found himself in a conference room that was not airconditioned in the Middle East with five rival bidders for a rich government deal. He wore a blue double-breasted Italian custom suit with thin red pinstripes placed about an inch apart. Blue shirt. As the 110-degree-Fahrenheit afternoon wore on, Barrack watched his competitors remove their jackets, loosen their ties and roll up their sleeves.

"Everybody was hot and irritable," says Barrack, who is chairman and chief executive of investment company Colony Capital LLC. But he refused to give in to the sweat drizzling down his back. "I sat and ate the heat," he says. "I didn't take my coat off and didn't roll up my sleeves."

This self-made son of a Lebanese shopkeeper ranks No. 374 on Forbes magazine's list of the 400 richest Americans, where he's estimated to be worth a billion dollars. An incurable deal maker, he wields his wardrobe like weaponry, using it to send messages about his abilities and intent.

Some people stick to play-it-safe standbys, and it works fine for them. This is the strategy of Donald Trump, Mr. Art of the Deal himself. He says he tries to match his clothing to what other people are likely to be wearing. "If I'm dealing with a terribly conservative group of people, I'll try to dress conservatively," he says.

Despite Trump's famously audacious behavior, his clothing is unwaveringly just this side of Basic American Golf-Playing Businessman dark suits, lace-up shoes, dress socks for work, or polo shirts with a Trump logo for casual, though his recent work on television has led him to discover pink ties.

As Trump and Barrack well know, negotiating involves looking for chinks in the armor of one's opponent. If "you sit with someone who's neutral, it's difficult to figure out where that weakness might lie," Barrack says and notes that Sun Tzu wrote in his 6th-century B.C. Chinese military treatise, "The Art of War," that the warrior to be feared most was the one who arrives naked.

Barrack revels in reading subtle signs of intent or emotion in others' bearing and wardrobes. Anyone sitting across the table from him should think twice before loosening a tie, removing a jacket, or rolling up sleeves. Barrack favors Hermes and Ferragamo ties in red — his lucky color. He wears pocket squares in London, where they're often seen, and skips overcoats in Paris, where, he says, most men don't wear them. In New York, he ties a neck scarf underover; in Italy, he ties the end through the loop, following local custom, in order to avoid "that startling effect that people have — that you're not really one of us."

Interestingly, given the level of thought he gives to all this, Barrack says he will sometimes throw it all out the window if the people he's dealing with show that they have intellectual depth. He notes, "Often, the people who are the most impeccable are the least substantive." CHRISTINA BINKLEY (THE WALL STREET JOURNAL)

Best in the City

Every trip to the mall includes the requisite assault by perfume ladies, all of whom are trying to sell you the latest fragrance by Britney Spears, Kimora Lee Simmons or Jennifer Lopez. But when they approach with Sarah Jessica Parker's new fragrance, COVET ($52, department stores, available Aug. 1), let it happen. The second offering from SJP comes in a pleasantly lime-hued bottle (complete with brown jeweled stopper) and, upon first spray, smells tartly aggressive. But soon Covet settles into a mix of magnolia- and wet forest-theme scents. The end result more Dior Poison than SJP's first offering, the rather juvenile Lovely — is a grown-up kind of good. ### Flat-Out Excellent Expensive flatirons are our very favorite things to test, because we would never, ever buy one. Which is why we were troubled the first time we tried the new FHI PLATFORM CERAMIC IRON ($195. fhiheat.com). Although it claims to work on towel-dried hair, on a low setting it took forever. On our second try, though, we cranked it up to about 320 degrees and used it on mostly dry hair, and it was impressive. No tugging or pulling, and locks held out impressively on a humid day. The only part we don't like is the on/off switch is on the inside of the iron, which makes us nervous to turn it off. KRISTEN PAGE-KIRBY (EXPRESS)

DAVID M. DOSA, M.D., an assistant professor of medicine at Brown University, was online Friday to discuss the story of Oscar, a cat with the ability to predict when residents of a nursing home are about to die.

How old was Oscar when people first noticed his ability?

Oscar was about 6 months old when we first started to notice his amazing ability. At 12 months, he received a commendation from a local hospice agency here in Rhode Island regarding his end-of-life care. Since then, we have all been paying attention.

WHICH WAS RELEASED ON FRIDAY

Is there probably something the cat can physically sense about impending death that we can't tell with our senses?

My sense is that the cat responds to a pheromone or smell that we, simply as humans, cannot recognize. Of course, others have ascribed Oscar's unique abilities to everything from behavioral mimicking to higher powers.

How is Oscar dealing with his newfound celebrity? Is he getting some fish tonight, rather than kibble? No — just kibble. He hasn't let celebrity get to his head just yet.

Although the morning shows all wanted to whisk him off to New York. I think he is holding out for Oprah, though!

I really enjoyed reading about Oscar. Animals provide so much comfort to sick and dying patients — and giving staff the extra time to alert family members is really invaluable.

I have heard from so many people who seem to understand the message that I am trying to deliver. The "cat of death"/grim reaper stuff is way over the top.
