GREEN AT CATHEDRAL

A mixture of ancient and modern in a unique Youth Service brought inspiration to a crowded cathedral on Sunday, August 15.

Canon Michael Green spoke at St Andrew's Cathedral, Sydney, to a congregation of over 1200 about the cost of discipleship.

The cathedral choir sang a modern version of the "Magnificat" and the "Nunc Dimittis" to a tune especially composed by Michael Hemans, the cathedral organist. The "Gloria" was based on a Jewish melody in which the congregation heartily joined.

The First Lesson was a dramatised version of Genesis 3 acted by members of the Andrew's Club, the cathedral's young people's organisation.

The World Singers brought the modern touch of music, involving the whole congregation, as they sang from the chancel steps.

Students of many of Sydney's church schools were present.

The Dean, the Very Reverend Lance Shilton, congratulated the congregation for finding their way into the cathedral, which was surrounded by trucks, scaffolding, screenings and concrete as Sydney Square nears completion. The sign in George Street reads, "This Cathedral Is Not Stuck In The Mud; Come In And See".

Canon Green immediately established rapport with the lively congregation. He lost no time in emphasising the cost of discipleship. He said:

"How are you going to cope with the world of which my generation has made a mess?"

"The West conducts its policies now in political life without any claim to moral considerations. Our society is morally impoverished and there is a tremendous spiritual vacuum (there's a great lack of purpose)."

"If you will come after me," says Jesus, "you'll have a bed of roses and a wonderful time." Rubbish!

"If anybody tells you that he is preaching to you the gospel of Jesus Christ and makes Jesus look like the washing powder that washes whiter; the 'one who'll give you a whale of a time', just come to him for power and joy and all these things, tell him that he's a liar."

"Jesus said, 'If any man come after me he has to deny himself and take up his cross and follow me'. To deny yourself; that means sacrifice. To take up your cross; that means shame and suffering."

"Suffering is the badge of the Christian. It was the badge of the Master. You cannot avoid it."

"Christ wants you — the whole of you. He doesn't want your decision. He wants your discipleship."

"If you're ashamed of Jesus Christ when you meet Him face to face on the day of judgment He will be ashamed of you before His Father in Heaven."

Scripture Union "mobilises beach missions . . ."

500 at training sessions

Scripture Union (NSW), in preparation for next summer's beach missions, mobilised more than 500 young people to attend in-depth training sessions at Sans Souci on July 31.

Their enthusiastic participation made the day one of our most successful Beach Mission Workers' Training Conferences yet — "and points to a great witness and outreach for the Lord in the coming summer holidays", an SU spokesman said.

Nearly 400 experienced workers gathered for a refresher session at Sans Souci Baptist Church, where the Rev Jim Kime, principal of the Baptist Bible College and chairman of SU's Bible Reading Committee, spoke on "The Bible in the life of the worker and his ministry". His address was widely appreciated and vigorously discussed.

Meanwhile, about 120 new workers gathered nearby at the Anglican Church for an "orientation" session.

After lunch, all the workers came together and moved into sessions dealing specifically with various age groups and special skills.

"The training received on the day will, of course, go well beyond the 50-odd beach missions at Christmas — it will make those involved far more effective in their local church work and daily witness for years to come," the spokesman said. Later in the week, SU staffer Owen Shelley, who had been overall leader of the conference, flew to Brisbane to be the main speaker at a similar event there.

Salvation Army officer to tour Israel

Major Cerben Stelstra, the first Salvation Army officer in the world to be released from his duties for ecumenical work, had been invited by the Israeli Government to tour Israel in recognition of his ecumenical co-operation and fraternity with Jews, an Australian Council of Churches spokesman said this week.

Major Stelstra is Executive Secretary of the New South Wales State Council of the Australian Council of Churches.

While overseas he will visit the World Council of Churches Centre in Geneva for talks with the WCC Department on Dialogue with Other Faiths and Ideologies.

Major Stelstra had long campaigned for Christian-Jewish dialogue and was currently involved in Christian-Jewish meetings at the Sydney Synagogue, the ACC spokesman said.

While in Israel he would make a special study of the Israeli National Reserve Bank and the economic structure of the country, "as a trained economist with considerable experience in the finance departments of the Salvation Army throughout the world."

He speaks Dutch, German, French, English, Afrikaans, Gaelic and has a working knowledge of Greek and Latin.

He has served in Germany, Belgium, Holland, Great Britain and South Africa.

His experience in South Africa has left him with strong views about the suppression of Africans under apartheid.

Ridley student to be assistant bishop

The Bishop of Central Tanganyika, Bishop Yohana Madinda, had announced the appointment of the Rev Alpha Francis Mohamed, principal of the Msalato Bible School, Dodoma, to be Assistant Bishop of the Diocese, a report from Tanzania this week said.

His consecration was held on Sunday, August 15, in the cathedral of the Holy Spirit, Dodoma, at which the archbishop of the church of the Province of Tanzania, Archbishop John Sepeku, officiated, the report said.

In 1972 his appointment as principal of the Msalato Bible School was announced and he has been serving there from 1973-1976.

Following his consecration on August 15, he left for the USA where he will undertake a further 12 months' study in theology at the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia from September 1.

At the completion of these studies he will return to take up his appointments as Assistant Bishop of the Diocese of Central Tanganyika.

He has served at St Paul's Church, Mpwapwa (1968-

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY APPROVES RECORD BUDGET

At the meeting of Federal Council in August, the Treasurer, Mr Eric Stockton reported that the Church Missionary Society's budget for the past year had been met.

At the same time, Mr Stockton presented the new budget for 1976-77 which was estimated at $950,000.

CMS is committed to send out trained personnel at the invitation of churches around the world to serve in partnership with them in Christian work.

All this includes training personnel at home, equipping them, financing their travel, supporting them through language study and maintaining them in their work.

Some newly-trained missionaries will make history for CMS by going to Iran Jaya, the newest area of CMS involvement, at the invitation of the Evangelical Christian Church of Iran Jaya. Others will go to Pakistan, Africa and North Australia in 1976-77.

The money to sustain this work comes from CMS members: those who give generously and regularly. The Society thanks God for the many people who by their prayers and giving, are committed to God's mission to the world.

Malcolm Muggeridge

Memorial Lecture to be given by Muggeridge

Malcolm Muggeridge believes that the ostensible guardians of our laws, constitutional liberties and religious faith are doing a better "dismantling" job than professional subversives, anarchists and atheists.

He will make this claim during his delivery of the Olivier Beguin Memorial Lecture for the Bible Society in Australia. The lecture will be given in Canberra, Sydney, Adelaide and Melbourne in October.

Muggeridge believes there may be a "death-wish" at work in the heart of civilisation. He sees bankers as promoting the inflation which will ruin them, educationalists seeking to create the moral and intellectual chaos which will nullify their professional purposes, moralists cutting away the roots of all morality and theologians systematically dismantling the structure of belief they exist to expound and promote.

The quest for power, for affluence and for knowledge is seen as a cul-de-sac with no earthly means of egress.

Through this gloomy picture he sees the Bible as more than ever relevant and containing words of everlasting truth.

Muggeridge will deliver the lecture on the following dates and at these venues: Canberra, Canberra Theatre, October 7; Sydney, Pitt Street Congregational Church, October 12; Adelaide, The Festival Theatre, October 13; Melbourne, The Dallas Brooks Hall, October 15.

The Archbishop of Sydney Sir Marcus Loane

ARCHBISHOP OF SYDNEY LAUNCHES OVERSEAS RELIEF FUND APPEAL

The Archbishop of Sydney, Sir Marcus Loane, has called for funds to assist needy people affected by disasters, wars, and famine.

In connection with the launching of the Archbishop of Sydney's Overseas Relief Fund, to be held throughout the month of September, Archbishop Loane said:

"In recent months the media seem to have brought into our living rooms more disasters than the world has seen for years. There have been earthquakes in China, the Philippines and Iran Jaya; the searing civil war in Lebanon is destroying countless homes and people week by week; terrorists in Ireland continue their relentless campaign; riots in Southern Africa threaten to erupt into open warfare; and Rhodesia is under graver threat than ever.

"The world is in a terrible mess, and much of it is man-made. Yet there are innocent victims: children and adults who are bystanders but who get caught up in the spreading effects of disaster.

"It is for the relief of such people that the Archbishop of Sydney's Overseas Relief Fund exists. Through missionaries and Christian agencies with whom I keep in touch, I have been able to distribute immediately, at least small grants to alleviate suffering in various tragedy-stricken parts of the world."

"The Overseas Relief Fund has, since it began in 1971, distributed $110,000. I suppose one could call that a drop in the bucket of world need. Or one could think of it in terms of houses provided for the homeless, blankets for the cold, and thousands of meals for deprived children."

Donations may be sent to the Archbishop's Overseas Relief Fund, St Andrew's House, Sydney Square, NSW, 2000.

Death of Mao Tse-tung

The death of Mao Tse-tung takes from the scene all but the last of the great figures who played a major role in the events leading up to and including the Second World War.

In recent times men such as Chiang Kai-shek, Haile Selassie, General Franco have passed away. Only Emperor Hirohito of Japan remains of the World War II political or national leaders.

Mao's death has been met with world-wide tributes in recognition of his singular place in history as the born willing to refer to those aspects of his character that in other men

In the midst of this avalanche of praise, few if any seem willing to refer to those aspects of character that in other men we find most repulsive. He is acclaimed as the one who unified his nation and mobilised it into an instrument of his will — Adolf Hitler did the same thing in Germany. He is acclaimed as the one who brought his country from feudalism to the very brink of industrial and technological maturity — Joseph Stalin did the same in Russia.

Such unqualified praise as has been showered on him at the news of his death might be appropriate if man lived by bread alone, if material, economic, political or military achievements constituted the true measure of achievement. But what of the cost?

Such material advances have been at the expense of millions of his countrymen who were allegedly of a different class or viewpoint — they were liquidated. In Hitler's or Stalin's case such wholesale massacre is grounds for condemnation. Why not with Mao?

Progress has been made in China but at the cost of personal liberty in that country, the most elementary freedoms we enjoy are unknown or forgotten in China today. To question or threaten them here is heresy, why is it not for Mao?

What of the church in China. If Mao is to take the credit for the re-birth of China, he must also take the blame for the apparent destruction of the Christian church there.

At no time did the Chairman repudiate his aims of violent world revolution — in fact his doctrine of wars of national liberation became the model for the conflicts in Indo-China and parts of present-day Africa.

Whatever be the quality of his leadership and vision, whatever be his intellectual attainment as philosopher and revolutionary, the simple fact remains that he spawned a movement that has denied freedom to hundreds of millions of human beings and imposed a physical, mental and spiritual slavery on them instead. One thing is certain — if history will not judge him aright, the Lord God will.

The progress report announces that a further round of Provincial Conferences to consider the contents of the proposed Prayer Book will be held across Australia in October this year. This follows a series of similar conferences last April-May.

It also announces that the Liturgical Commission will continue to receive criticisms and proposed amendments almost until the General Synod. It will then place before the Synod its own list of recommended amendments to the Book.

MOTHERS' UNION PLANS FOR CHILD-CARE WEEK

During Child-Care Week — September 19-26 — The Mothers' Union of the Diocese of Sydney will seek to bring home the special needs of children to its 2000 members throughout Sydney.

Already the Mothers' Union is heavily involved in the care of children through its various activities.

The Mothers' Union now visits thousands of new mothers throughout Sydney hospitals, offering assistance and providing them with helpful Christian literature on bringing the love of Christ into the home.

The "tea and sympathy" service at Sydney Courts, where Mothers' Union members provide tea and biscuits and show concern for parents and children waiting for their case to be heard, has now "caught on" throughout Australia and Mothers' Unions in various parts of the nation have now formed "Tea and Sympathy" groups.

Because of the increase in the divorce rate (there are now 1,000 divorces each week in Australia), the Mothers' Union is seeking to promote conditions in Australia which are favourable to stable family life, through hundreds of Mothers' groups throughout Sydney, by means of discussion groups, sharing and caring, understanding, visiting, using a Christian basis in all their outreach.

On the practical level, members support play groups, provide finance for counselling and printing of Christian literature and are aware of the need of child care in crisis situations and helping those whose family life has met with adversity.

"1,000 divorces each week in Australia"

Mrs D. W. B. Robinson, president said: "Our priority, is the task of educating people in the Christian values of real stable family life, happy homes where Christ is in control."

"The aim of the Mothers' Union is to strengthen Christian Family life as we feel this is the ultimate need for our nation."

FAREWELL SERVICE

A Service to mission and farewell two missionary families will be held at St Phillip's Caringbah on September 26th, 1976 at 10.45 am.

Those leaving are Mr and Mrs Michael Hore, going to linguistic work in North Australia and Rev and Mrs John Thew, who are going to Pakistan.

Both families will be missionaries with the Church Missionary Society.

ON & OFF THE RECORD

BY DAVID HEWETSON

"TOO LOW, SWEET CHARIOT"

In the daily avalanche that pours out of the letter box, I recently received a brochure advertising the film "The Outer Space Connection".

Its particular virtue, I was assured, is that it "extends the mind-stunning theories first expressed in 'Chariots of the Gods'."

Well, I certainly agree that there are mind-stunning theories in "Chariots".

I was stunned to think that any intelligent person was supposed to swallow it. But I was more stunned to find that so many did, especially amongst the otherwise sceptical High School generation.

The impact of "Chariots" was so immense in fact that it obviously fell into very well prepared ground. And that bears a little examination for would-be communicators of the Gospel.

Ad Astra and Half Bake

"Chariots" and its now quite numerous ilk were recently dubbed "fiction science" by a reviewer in "Time".

By comparison with science-fiction this new genre came into vogue during the early '50s when the USA in particular was overtaken by mass UFO "sightings". The modern mind began to be conditioned to the possibility of the kindly (or otherwise) space visitors, whether as little green men or in a more anonymous and sinister mode. Underlying the UFO mystique was the conviction that the messengers from the skies came from a higher civilisation which had outgrown war and violence, and they bore the timely warning that man must do likewise or perish.

In fact the psychologist Carl Jung said that the "sightings" were psychic projections of man's hope for the existence of a higher power in a frightening and chaotic world.

Erich von Daniken (the author of "Chariots") and now a lot of others have obviously capitalised on this. As "Time" puns: "They peddle an old cosmological recipe — simply ad astra, mix feverishly and half bake."

But in doing so they give some very interesting indicators to modern man's attitude to religion.

Men in crisis sometimes look for a new faith or a new variant of an old one, and this has actually happened a number of times in history.

For example the millenarian cults of Mediaeval Europe, the Mahdiya of the Sudan, some of the new religions of the third world, and the cargo cults of the Pacific.

As a matter of fact, Peter Lawrence the anthropologist includes the flying saucer cults with these in his book "Road Along Cargo". (Melbourne Uni Press 1967.)

The Gods and the Goods

Men who feel threatened sometimes also feel that their old creeds cannot cope with the new crisis. They grasp desperately at some of the lineaments of the new world that threatens them and try to fashion these into a modern and appropriate faith.

In New Guinea, for example, the cargo cults express the dissatisfaction of the indigene at his status in colonial society. He can only improve it by laying hold of cargo (the status symbol) and since his old culture came from the gods, they — or new ones — will deliver the goods if he finds the right ritual. He junks or reshapes his old beliefs, and continually modifies them as the cargo fails to eventuate.

For him, religion, as it has been for many, is partly a mystical "technology" for the production of material goods and the stabilisation of society.

It explains his world and gives him a way of getting the most out of it. But if a new world comes upon him he needs new myths and new religious techniques in order to cope.

A Faith that fits

Religion to the worshippers of Baal was much the same. And the Israelites coming into the new and sophisticated society of Canaan must have found it very beguiling.

They faced the crisis of life in an agricultural setting after the old life of the nomad, and of living in towns and cities after simply being part of a tribe.

It was tempting to think that the "appropriate" fertility gods of those who were at home in the new world should replace (or modify) the God who had led them on the long desert marches. But they found him "jealous" of the truth about himself, resistant to modification, much more "at home" in Canaan than the myths he eventually replaced. Baal is now only of academic interest, but the Lord continues to establish his name in every part of the world.

To return to fiction science. It is curious that von Daniken uses the analogy of the cargo cults to launch his book. Simple Islanders were so impressed by the American invasion during the war, he says, that they set up a cult to explain it.

Clamp down on Bible

A growing world-wide clamp-down on bible distribution has prompted the British and Foreign Bible Society to call for "all-out prayer support" to re-establish work in the affected countries.

Mr John Dean, the United Bible Societies' World Service Officer based in London, writes in the Society newspaper World in Action: "There seem to be more places closed to the Word of God at present for one reason or another than at any time since World War Two."

Mr Dean reports that the Bible Societies are developing special strategies to meet the spiritual needs in these so-called "closed" areas without breaking the law. "We are looking particularly for developments of the work in the Islamic world," he says.

But, the newspaper continues, "the fact is that trouble-spots are springing up everywhere."

In Africa a number of countries are closed to Gospel distribution. In Algeria the Bible Shop was closed by the Government some months ago because the Society was distributing scripture in Kabyle, a tribal language, and the Government is keen to establish Arabic as the national language.

A number of African countries have traditionally been closed to the Gospel, including Libya and Mauritania, while in Angola the former Bible Society secretary was Portuguese and had to leave the country on independence. But negotiations are going on to reopen the work under Angolan leadership.

Europe also has a number of areas where Gospel work is tough, if not impossible, reports World in Action. No work has been carried out in Albania since the Second World War. In the Soviet Union, although the Government has allowed some scriptures to be printed, the quantities are never sufficient.

There have been problems in providing scriptures in Bulgaria, too — only a few scriptures have been allowed in since 1945 but a new translation of the Bible in Bulgarian is nearing completion and the Bible Societies are hoping that their offer to finance its production will be accepted by the Government.

In some parts of Turkey the work is also difficult. Some scripture is distributed but the hard-working Bible Society secretary has found on three extensive trips to more remote areas that bookshops either refuse to sell Bibles or take only a handful.

Lebanon has been cut-off since Bible House in Beirut was burnt out in the recent fighting and because the city was a major centre of Bible distribution for the whole Middle East serious problems have arisen.

Howbeit, the newspaper reports that it is hoped that a new base — now being set up in Amman, Jordan — will be able to service the needs of Syria, Lebanon, Jordan and Iraq.

Scripture distribution is not permitted in Saudi Arabia or the two Yemen Republics. Afghanistan is substantially closed to the Gospel along with Tibet, China and Mongolia.

But a bright spot is the Arab Oil States where Scripture distribution work has increased.

Vietnam has been closed since the war there ended but Owing to a typographical error a sentence in the NSW Casino Story in the September 2 issue was incorrect. It should have read: He (Mr Wran) had not decided whether it (the enquiry) would proceed on the premise that there would be casinos, and the enquiry would be introduced. OR whether the enquiry would be on the question of whether there should be Legalised Casinos.

there are hopes that the work may be re-established. No word has been heard of former Khmer Bible Society secretary, Son Sonne, for more than a year, although another worker in the area has managed to get out a message saying that they are doing what they can to keep the operation going.

In the Americas, Cuba has been a closed country since the Castro regime took over, although small quantities of scriptures have entered the country with permission.

World in Action declares that in spite of the setbacks "the long arm of prayer can reach even into these areas and the United Bible Societies are calling on Christians to join them in prayer that national leadership the world over will realise the value of scripture and that even those areas closed for many years will have their doors opened by the power of God."

PRESBYTERIANS JOIN UNIONS FOR NON-ALIGNED POLICY

The Church and Nation committee of the Presbyterian Church in Victoria has joined with a group of left wing trade unions and politicians to "endorse" a conference on an independent Australian foreign policy.

The committee will provide the only official denominational backing for the conference.

Others supporting it include Dr Jim Cairns and a number of Labor senators. Trade union "endorsements" include the Waterside Workers' Federation, the Australian Metal Workers' Union and the Victorian branch of the Federal Miscellaneous Workers' Union.

Aim of the conference, which is sponsored by the Congress for International Co-operation and Disarmament, is to examine Australia's foreign, military and resources policies, and the alternative of an independent and non-aligned stance.

A spokesman for the Church and Nation committee, the Rev Alan Hardie, said he was personally aware of the risk of the church being identified with the political left through its support for the conference, which will be held in Melbourne, October 1-3.

Mr Hardie, who is on the preparatory group of the conference, said he saw the conference's aims as "very much in line with decisions of the Victorian Presbyterian Assembly in recent years."

Other churches were asked by conference organisers for endorsements, and declined — although other church people and Christian groups (such as Pax Christi) are involved. Aust Pres Life

ISLANDER MEETS THE QUEEN

The first Torres Strait woman ever to visit England represented the Diocese of Carpentaria at the recent Mother's Union Centenary Celebrations in London.

She is Mrs Lena Passi, wife of Archdeacon Passi, who is currently Precursor of the cathedral Rockhampton.

Mrs Passi is also the first Torres Strait islander to have been presented to the Queen.

Bishop Hunt called on the Church to "give women their full human and ecclesiastical rights. It is a shame that the Body of Christ must engage in debate over principles as elemental as that."

Bishop Hunt appealed to Methodists to "move beyond preoccupation with theological bickering. We must rekindle that original ardour which caused John Wesley to leap on the back of his horse and ride out to save England and the World."

Religious feelings sign of 'mental illness' in the USSR

"More details about a young member of the Orthodox Church who is being held in a Soviet mental hospital because of his faith had reached Keston College (the Centre for the Study of Religion and Communism)," the English "Church Times" reported last week.

The Rev Michael Bourdeaux, director of the college, told the "Church Times" that the latest batch of documents, from a new circle of Moscow believers, confirmed earlier reports about 25-year-old Alexander Argentov and added further details.

Mr Bourdeaux said the information showed that Argentov's ready admission that he was a Christian was sufficient for the examining psychiatrists — Irina Zinchenko and Alexander Mazikov — to refer him for indefinite detention and forcible treatment in a mental hospital.

Ten people, including a T. A. Argentova, who may be Argentov's mother, have written an Appeal to Public Opinion in which they de-

Reproduction of a photo of Alexander Argentov, said to have been taken by friends last month in the grounds of a Moscow mental hospital.

"I am kept with seriously ill people, who are tied to their beds because of their violent behaviour. I have to listen to their wild howling, and these surroundings, and also the effect of the medicines, are oppressing me."

"The attitude of the doctors has an even more oppressive effect on me. "Completely ignorant of everything concerning religion, they insistently try to convince me that my religious feelings are a mental illness..."

Mr Bourdeaux says that Argentov's parents are, in his own words, "militant atheists". However, they have taken their son's part, only to be met by a blank wall of refusals and denials, as the open letter to Kuroedov reported:

"S. M. Degtyarev (the doctor in charge of Argentov) refused to acquit the parents with the documentary basis for the enforced hospitalisation of their son, claiming that these documents were a professional secret.

"To the parents' assertions that their son was healthy he replied that, not being professionals in the field of psychiatry, they could not understand their son's illness. "In the psychiatric clinic the parents were told that their son had voluntarily agreed to go to hospital, which Argentov himself categorically denies."

According to Mr Bourdeaux, the authors of the Appeal to Public Opinion (copies of which have been sent to Soviet bodies and to Dr Philip Potter, General Secretary of the World Council of Churches) are themselves under threat.

One of his doctors told Argentov that all those who had signed the "anti-Soviet" Appeal would be sent to prison.

SHOULD BISHOPS BE TRAINED FOR ROLE?

The recent Commission on Ministry consulted the bishops of the Australian church about whether there was a need for some training to help bishops carry out some aspects of their ministry more effectively.

Most of the bishops felt that some training was needed, and some of them supported the idea of a training course for bishops and bishops-elect, tailored to the needs of those taking part.

As a result of this consultation with bishops, the Commission will recommend that the General Synod ask the Primate to suggest to the Bishops' Conference that the conference appoint one or more persons to prepare a course of training to help bishops-elect and new bishops, and to serve as an in-service refresher-course for other bishops.

Among other things, the Commission will also make some recommendations regarding clergy stipends and clergy tenure.

It will recommend that "surplice fees" (payments made at weddings, funerals and baptisms) should be paid into parish revenue or a discretionary fund rather than be added to the priest's personal income.

It will also recommend that the General Synod advise all diocesan synods to ensure that in each diocese the minimum stipend (possibly with increments for years of service) be paid in all parishes, regardless of their financial standing, and that adequate allowances be paid to the clergy for travelling and entertainment.

On clergy tenure, the Commission will recommend that the General Synod commend to diocesan bishops the practice of ensuring that an incumbent consults his bishop and parish wardens (or an appropriate parish body) after the fifth year of his incumbency concerning wishes for his future ministry, and thereafter every two years during which he remains in that position.

Just so mankind visited and indeed fathered (from apes) by astronauts created religion as an explanation. "Was God an astronaut?" says the blurb. And incredibly some seem to think so. Ironically the facts are the very reverse of von Daniken's theory.

The same kind of thing that produced the cargo cults did not produce the Bible. It produced "The Chariots of the Gods" instead! And after 30 million copies sold we know who has the cargo.

Rumanian church "restive under totalitarianism"

(Grand Rapids) USA — There is unrest among the Baptists in Rumania. Since 1973 the church has experienced a great renewal; so many new members have been drawn to the church that many congregations are having problems accommodating them.

The church was apparently shaken awake by the famous letter of Josif Ton, a pastor and teacher at the seminary in Bucharest.

In his 1973 letter he repudiated a number of limitations imposed on the church of the state as being in conflict with Scripture as well as with the socialist constitution of Rumania. Ton's letter inspired the membership to take a more forceful stance towards the authority of the state.

This new mood was shown in their impatience with the present central leadership of the church.

This leadership is chosen by representatives elected by various regional gatherings. In the elections held last year almost all of the present central leadership lost their seats.

However, after the fact, the central leadership created a new regulation for such regional elections and declared the already held elections invalid. It was supported in this by the state secretary of religion.

The authorities also rejected a delegate who was chosen in place of the old secretary general and appointed the latter to take his place. The man who was anticipated to become the new chairman was also rejected as unfit.

The ministerial association of Bucharest, of which Josif Ton is a member, has accused the old leadership of using totalitarian methods to achieve its ends. It warned that if they do not cease with their unlawful action, they will have to be deposed by the people of the church for their sinful way of life.

Inflation eats into Clergy superannuation

Sir,
The onrush of inflation continues to depreciate our currency and with it the effectiveness of all fixed incomes. The majority of investment-superannuation funds now provide but fractional supplement to the government Social Security Pension for a couple; the Diocesan a smaller one. This means, in effect that the prospective standard of living for our diocesan veterans, clerical and lay, will be very little above the minimum.

Our clergy in particular are, by nature of their calling and circumstances unable to accumulate other provision, and in many cases have not acquired a home. Similarly they are relatively handicapped in post retirement employment.

The Board of the Sydney Diocesan Superannuation Fund is not empowered to effect any major alteration in the administration of the fund, and has recently declined to recommend any revision of the basis of diocesan provision for our aged personnel; there is therefore no present prospect of improvement on the fund's standard as above indicated. This amounts to a serious reproach to our church.

It has become quite clear that inflation, like droughts, is a recurrent, unpredictable and incalculable menace to all investment activity; it nullifies the prognostication of the actuaries.

To obviate the menace of inflation we must make an entirely new approach to superannuation provision. As such need not call for contribution appreciably greater than the present from the three parties, personnel, parishes and diocese our clergy will be in order to ask that an alternative be fully investigated by an unbiased authority.

For various reasons commercial concerns and institutions are unsuited to a "Pay-as-we-go" scheme; and they may be terminated. Government has been cited as the only body capable of conducting such a method of superannuation provision; the Social Security Service is such.

On the contrary the writer contends that the church, unique in its perpetuity and cohesion of personnel, and in particular the majority Anglican Church in Australia is in a more secure position to conduct such type of provision than governments, with their unpredictable policies and increasing tendency to socialistic conformity. Our respect for our clergy and diocesan personnel surely calls us to assume somewhat above this level; only a concerted lay movement with one hopes, clerical support can initiate a new approach to this problem, it is already overdue.

Triplicate contributions (as above) to a fund on only temporary investment, for distribution within one/three years of receipt will use the funds while they retain most of their "real" value.

Willoughby.

Let your light shine

Sir,
One of the most magnificent and humbling pictures of Christians as drawn by Jesus is recorded in Matthew: "You are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid."

(Notice the crescendo) "Nor do men light a lamp and put it under a bushel, but on a stand, and it gives light to all in the house." (Here comes the breath-taking climax) "Let YOUR light shine before men..." We all know the verse — or do we? Anglicans throughout the world, Sunday by Sunday, hear "Let your light so shine gable gable gable..." — or it might as well be that.

The whole beautiful passage has utterly lost its meaning while we rummage round in handbags or pockets for our collection money. In a small church the other day, the clergyman absent-mindedly forgot his usual drone "Let your light so shine" and the churchwarden needed a poke from his wife before he realised he'd missed out on his "get the plate" cue and wasn't collecting the money.

I'm not objecting to taking up the collection, but surely we don't have to desecrate the word of God — indeed, what are related as the actual words of Jesus — in order to do so.

Our prayer book even gives us other (more suitable) suggestions for an appropriate text. Could we have a drive by readers of this paper, at least, for such use and restore to its context and its wide, full, wonderful meaning, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and give glory to your Father who is in heaven."

ACL CONFERENCE ON REFORMATION

Rev Maurice Betteridge the Federal Secretary of CMS, who took his Master's degree in Reformation Theology, will be the chief speaker at a Reformation Conference on "The Place of the 39 Articles in Today's Church", arranged by the Conference Committee of the Anglican Church League for Friday 29th October, 1976 at 8 pm.

The Conference will be held in St Mary's Parish Hall, Brays Rd, Concord North.
After Mr Betteridge has presented his paper, certain issues will be raised by Dr Peter O'Brien from Moore Theological College, who will enter into dialogue and open up the subject for questions and discussion from those present.

"The subject should hold interest for many with the proposed new Prayer Book soon to be produced containing the 39 Articles, because of the insistence of the Diocese of Sydney," Rev Gordon Robinson, Convener of the Conference said.

Conference centre $200,000 complex plan for Islington

Bishop Trevor Huddleston recently laid four cornerstones for a 200,000 pounds neighbourhood centre at St Mary's Islington, the Rev Don Howard said in a recent letter from England.

The building is adjacent to the parish hall built to accommodate the Islington Conference.

Construction workers found pottery fragments and also an old well during their excavations for the foundations.

Bishop Huddleston, the Bishop of Stepney, was invited by the Vicar of St Mary's, Presbtery Peter Johnston.

The bishop said the building was symbolic of the concern of the living church at St Mary's for the community in the area.

The Vicar of Islington, Presbtery Peter Johnston.

Mr Johnston said the first phase would consist of games and meeting hall and a gallery and club room.

The second phase would provide various rooms and a caretaker's flat.

"Activities will include club for retired people and facilities for children," Mr Johnston said.

"The first phase will cater mainly for young people." He said that the decision to proceed with such an ambitious plan had been made only after prayer by members of the congregation.

CATHEDRAL ADDRESS BY FRIEDA BROWN ON ROLE OF LAW

Mrs Frieda Brown, chairman of the Australian Festival of Light, at a recent talk on "Women in the Community" claimed that some Christians were not concerned in maintaining society's laws.

Speaking at Sydney's St Andrew's Cathedral, Mrs Brown gave five reasons why she said Christians were not maintaining these laws — particularly those which supported the family as the basic unit of society.

Mrs Brown, MA (Oxon), aged 44, and a mother of four, is the Festival's main spokeswoman on women's issues.

She listed the five reasons why some Christians were not supporting these basic laws as:

1. Some Christians have not understood the teachings of the Word of God which says that God's rule of behaviour is for all people whom God has created and not only for Christians.

Our Laws in Australia are based on the Judaeo-Christian ethic, as for example, stealing and murder.

But in sexual matters, a great many Christians seem to think that these eternal truths do not apply to people who are not committed Christians.

In fact, I often get more help from good family people who would not call themselves Christians, but whose God-given conscience tells them how foolish it is to encourage permissiveness, both for the individual's sake and for society generally.

2. Some Christians, particularly young Christians involved in personal evangelism, say that no one, especially sexual deviants,

For example, in the second-year Welfare Work course at Sydney Technical College, it is alleged that a lecturer said that society needs to change and to stop treating incest as taboo.

One has to be a mature student to stand up to the authority figure of the teacher in this situation.

4. Some Christians are persuaded by the arguments of the Humanists because they seem to be more loving than the Christian in their attitude to other people.

5. Some Christians are persuaded by the arguments of the Marxists because they seem to be less materialistic than the Christians in their attitude towards possessions.

The appeal is generally to young people who have not yet had the responsibilities of caring for a family.

The difficulty here is that the Marxists hardly ever identify themselves as such, but nevertheless they continue to attack the family and one can only recognize them by the kind of argument they use.

I recall that Marx says in his "Capital" of 1867: "The family and its components will vanish when capital vanishes."

Abolition of the family! Even the extreme radicals hold up their hands in horror when they speak of this shameful Communist proposal.

It seemed to be that there were some typically Marxist arguments used in a radio programme.

It was said, and evidence was produced, that mothers went out to work only for greed, lured out by the advertisements of the capitalist society in which we live.

Therefore the children were not cared for and so the family life broke down.

This breakdown of the nuclear family is traced back then solely to the greed of the capitalist society.

We were told that there was a much purer way of life in a commune, where there was not much need to go outside that society for one's material needs.

My answer to them was not to commend greed at all. I wanted to build up the should appear to be attacked even if this is done in the process of lobbying Parliament to keep our country's laws as close as possible to the divine Law.

I would reject this advice because I take my strategy solely from the Word of God which says: "Take no part in the unfruitful works of darkness, but instead expose them..." when anything is exposed by the light it becomes visible."

"Therefore it is said: 'Awake O sleeper and arise from the dead and Christ shall give you light.'" Ephesians 5:11-14.

Here Scripture tells us that a wide expose of sin, far from impeding evangelism, leads to personal conversion to Christ.

I too thought that they had the highest motives until I took part in one TV debate on the family.

For example, on the Mike Willis programme on sex education, a Christian doctor did not seem to understand the reason for the law against carnal knowledge for girls under 16.

It is to protect the girl from herself and from men until she is mature enough to make her own decision.

It is her support against her own lack of wisdom until her mental development catches up with her physical maturity.

3. Some Christians wish to appear trendy and want to be seen to be supporting the latest ideas currently taught in our places of tertiary education.

The Humanists seem to be dominant in this scene at the moment.

For example, in the second-year Welfare Work course at Sydney Technical College, it is alleged that a lecturer said that society needs to change and to stop treating incest as taboo.

One has to be a mature student to stand up to the authority figure of the teacher in this situation.

4. Some Christians are persuaded by the arguments of the Humanists because they seem to be more loving than the Christian in their attitude to other people.

5. Some Christians are persuaded by the arguments of the Marxists because they seem to be less materialistic than the Christians in their attitude towards possessions.

God-given unit of the family. I commended the increased family allowances that the mother has just received, which will encourage many mothers to stay at home and care for their children.

I did not have occasion to produce my evidence that the majority of women go out to work for economic necessity.

I also tried to prick the bubble of the commune which is often such a transient experiment.

I was interested to hear later that this programme was listened to in at least one tertiary educational institution and that every question and answer was expected to be recorded by the students.

Thus a potentially large number of young people are getting the Marxist line on the family in what I, for one, thought was a housewives' talk-back programme.

In conclusion, I am the first to acknowledge that the God-given unit of the family needs the support and protection of our governments to meet economic and social changes.

May I give a plea here to a Christian to be very careful which group of people you give your support to.

Think through your position very carefully. Examine the long-term principles of the group.

You may find superficial similarities to your own view, but, are you basically ideologically similar?

ANTI-CASINO RALLY

The Council of Churches will hold a rally to protest against the decision of the NEW Government to legalise casinos.

It will be held at the Lyceum Theatre, Pitt Street, on September 26th, 1976 at 3 pm.

The speakers will be: Bishop Clive Kerle, Rev Keith Watson, President of the Baptist Union in NSW, Mrs Thorburn, Mr Jim McCrudden a leading lawyer and Rev Alan Walker of the Central Methodist Mission.

The Secretary of the Council of Churches said that the churches had not conceded the battle, despite what Mr Wan had said, and this rally is the first of a series of actions aimed at stopping the legalisation of casinos.

GLEBE ADMINISTRATION BOARD ADMINISTRATION MANAGER

The Glebe Administration Board is an organisation which acts as a trustee of many Church of England properties. These include city office buildings, a shopping centre, industrial and residential properties. Its staff are involved in such activities as selling, valuing, investigating new investment proposals, advising other church departments on property matters, management of leases and collection of rents and there is also a property maintenance department.

The Board is seeking an active churchman with managerial skills for the new position of Administration Manager. He may have tertiary qualifications but he will have a background of considerable experience in a managerial role. Accordingly his age will probably be at least 35 years and older applicants may be suitable.

In addition to have overall responsibility for administration procedures and co-ordination of the various departments, the position will entail the production and analysis of various reports relating to a wide range of the Board's operations.

This is a senior appointment. The successful applicant will be a divisional head and will report direct to the Chief Executive Officer. An appropriate salary will be negotiated with the man who has the abilities the Board is seeking.

Applications marked "Confidential" should be forwarded to: The Chief Executive Officer Glebe Administration Board 275 George Street Sydney, NSW, 2000

CHAPLAIN

Applications are invited for the position of Chaplain to Church of England Girls' Boarding School — to start in third term, or as soon as possible thereafter. The successful applicant should preferably be a trained teacher. The School has one of the finest chapels in Australia and it is possible that accommodation will be available. Curriculum vitae, together with the names and addresses of three referees should be sent to The Principal, New England Girls' School, Armidale, NSW 2350.

Prof Kramer critical of education trends

One of Australia's leading education experts expressed concern at the philosophy of education being implemented in Australia's schools.

Speaking at a clergy conference in Sydney last month, Professor Leonie Kramer of Sydney University condemned present trends in the public education system as contrary to the real interests of children and the community.

Professor Kramer pointed to the vagueness of the accepted aims of the New South Wales state system, which referred to making the child a whole person, teaching him or her "to be", making him or her morally autonomous. Such statements, she said, could mean anything at all, depending on who interpreted them. In practice, she claimed, they reflected a post-romantic, existentialist attitude which exalted the individual above society.

This is the reason, said Professor Kramer, for the trend away from teaching subjects towards developing personality — necessary and good, but not really the business of the school — and from encouraging from every individual the maximum attainment in every sphere having regard to his or her ability and capacity in that sphere, towards catering for children's interests. This led to superficiality and trendiness, and was also, said the Professor, unfair to the child, because until he learns something about life he cannot know what his interests are.

The move was away from equality of opportunity to equality of output; excellence was regarded as elitist and undemocratic, and this must inevitably lead to a lowering of standard towards mediocrity. This was against the long-term interests of the child.

Professor Kramer accused the NSW Education Department of cynical disregard of extensive overseas evidence of the bad effects of this outlook and of doctrinaire persistence in practices and policies which were being increasingly Exorcism: commanding devils to leave? — or preaching the Gospel?

In this thought-provoking review of a new book on Biblical demonology, the Rev Peter Jensen, of Moore Theological College, Sydney, discusses whether exorcism is the casting out of devils, or that of preaching the Gospel, as one writer is quoted as saying.

"Satan Cast Out — A Study in Biblical Demonology" by F. S. Leahy
The Banner of Truth Trust, 1975

A curious feature of the Report of the Sydney Diocesan Commission of Enquiry into the Occult (1975) is its apparent confusion about exorcism.

One of its recommenda-

Prof Kramer critical of education trends

discredited and discarded in Britain and America, where they had been tried and found wanting.

In reply to a question, Professor Kramer said that while it was true that the new system was intended to reduce the advantage children of socio-economically privileged parents had previously had, which was a worthy aim, there was no evidence that it did anything of the sort. It would have been better to improve the old system rather than scrap it for a new one which was no better in this respect and worse in others.

Professor Kramer agreed with another questioner that groups such as Gay Lib, which were constantly trying to get into schools to reach students, were basically selfish. Their aim was not to benefit the students by imparting knowledge about their life-style or problems, but to make converts.

The Professor concluded by saying that informed public opinion could reduce the excesses of the present system and hasten the return to sanity which was already occurring overseas.

tions was that: "The right of clergy to conduct exorcisms should be defined by diocesan authorities".

In the appendix written by Dr Callinson we read that: "Exorcism is spiritual surgery," and again, "Exorcism should be carried out by someone who is trained in this method."

It is natural to conclude that by exorcism the Report is referring to the practice of commanding demons to leave possessed persons in the name of Jesus Christ, with prayer.

However, when Dr Alan Cole discusses the subject in the next appendix, a striking difference emerges. For Dr Cole exorcism is the preaching of the Gospel.

He writes: "It is, indeed, the proclamation of the Gospel that is the true 'exorcism'; and it demands a whole-hearted response and tuning to Christ by the one concerned."

He adds: "This does not mean an empty magical incantation of some divine name, as though the vocabularies in themselves had mysterious force."

Such a definition, (from the Commission's theological expert), can hardly be squared with the suggestion that clergy need to be "trained in this method", or need to have their rights defined by diocesan authorities. No one needs special episcopal endorsement to proclaim the Gospel!

The report has much to commend it, and it is not my aim to denigrate it.

He talks about much else beside. In all, it is a sane study of demonology from within a carefully thought-out Biblical and historical perspective. It is worth reading.

Peter Jensen.

Adam was "Old Stone Age" man

"Who Was Adam?" by E. K. Victor Pearce
Exeter, Paternoster Press Ltd
1976 pp 151

This book is bound to produce different reactions. Pearce's thesis (having disposed of earlier evolutionary anthropological theories) is that the Adam of Gen 1 is Old Stone Age man generally, whereas the Adam of Gen 2 is an individual, the inaugurator of the neolithic food-gathering culture of about 10,000 years ago.

The garden of Eden was probably one of the small plateau valleys of Asia Minor exposed as a result of the Pleistocene ice-sheet retreat.

In this view Pearce accommodates the notion of "pre-Adamic" men with Adam as individual, disposing of the former in the flood.

These first 11 chapters are certainly the most interesting of the book (though Pearce's notion of "two Adams" is not new).

The second half of the book is less stimulating and his attempt to generate the Ancient Near Eastern population in the short historical post-flood span that remains is not convincing.

But the book does have the great merit of making the Adam of the fall a real flesh and blood character and though this is yet another treatment of a perennial theme it is advanced by one with an expert knowledge of his fields.

The book is interesting reading but as so often apologetics of this nature solves and leaves the really significant problem of the meaning of the material in its Biblical setting untouched.

Mr North, speaking on behalf of the AFCEI executive said: "With a redefinition of the Ambassadors for Christ International training programme, the AFCEI executive and the council for the Illawarra Bible College have mutually agreed that the further development of IBC as a college, providing a more in-depth Bible theological training, would be better served by IBC becoming a fully independent institution."

The present college council has therefore taken over the full management of Illawarra Bible College.

"AFC International rejoice in the part played by IBC since the early 1960's in training scores of young men and women who today are serving the Lord Jesus Christ in many parts of the world."

A land of monuments

ONE THING'S FOR SURE! When it comes to memorials, monuments and plaques, the Mother Country beats all-comers hands down.

Every place has something or other on a wall, on the floor or on a pedestal (and when I say every place, I mean every).

One stumbles over them in the parks, bumps into them on paths and gets a stiff neck looking up at them on walls or against the sky. (Plus "Keep your eyes on the road!" from you-know-who as we drive along.)

DURHAM CATHEDRAL contains a plaque unseen by many.

Commemorating the Cathedral Prior during whose term the cloisters were finished in the 15th century, it reminds us that his "family has won an everlasting name in the lands to him unknown".

There, beneath the family crest of "stars and stripes", is the name of John Washington, the stock from whom came a more famous scion to be first president of those unknown lands.

WE LATER VISITED the old family home of Washington Hall a few miles north of Durham.

A genealogy shows that President George descended from King John and nine out of 25 Barons Sureties of Magna Carta — he couldn't lose.

Sure enough, the apocryphal story of the cherry tree is recorded, as well as the well-known caption under a print:

"First in war,
First in peace
And First in the hearts of his countrymen."

Actually, George Washington was more English in his outlook than many American visitors to the home might realise.

It is a tribute to his leadership that during the winter of Valley Forge, only one third of the people in the colonies supported him; the remainder were evenly divided between the opposition and the indifferent, yet he forged the nation into the United States.

A BLACK SMEAR unsuccessfully seeks to obliterate part of the inscription on the Martyrs' Memorial, Oxford.

The words are "against the errors of the Church of Rome" — errors which we do well to remember in these days of ecumenical detente without any doctrinal retraction by the papists.

Interestingly, London's "Monument" had a line removed altogether from the north panel in 1830.

BIBLE COLLEGE SPLITS FROM AMBASSADORS

Details are being finalised for the separation of Illawarra Bible College from Ambassadors for Christ International.

Joint statements issued by Rev Ian North, international director of AFCEI and Rev Linleigh Roberts, principal of Illawarra Bible College, emphasised the positive benefits of this mutually agreed separation.

Mr North, speaking on behalf of the AFCEI executive said: "With a redefinition of the Ambassadors for Christ International training programme, the AFCEI executive and the council for the Illawarra Bible College have mutually agreed that the further development of IBC as a college, providing a more in-depth Bible theological training, would be better served by IBC becoming a fully independent institution."

The present college council has therefore taken over the full management of Illawarra Bible College.

"AFC International rejoice in the part played by IBC since the early 1960's in training scores of young men and women who today are serving the Lord Jesus Christ in many parts of the world."

Mr North further commented, "I and my AFC colleagues assure the continuing college of our goodwill and prayers for the further usefulness and blessing under the leadership of the principal, the Rev Linleigh Roberts."

An innocent abroad

The powers that be have thoughtfully added it to the bottom of the panel (along with details of its deletion): "But Popish frenzy, which wrought such horrors, is not yet quenched."

THE MONUMENT, designed by Christopher Wren "to preserve the memory of the Great Fire, is 202 feet high, the distance from the site of the bakehouse in Pudding Lane where the fire began.

In the crypt of St Bride's, Fleet Street, is an eyewitness record of the fire by a John Evelyn, who told how "... All Fleet Streete, the Old Bailey, Ludgate Hill... now flaming and most of it reduced to ashes; the stones of St Paul's flew like grenades... ye melting lead running downe the streets in a streame, and the very pavements glowing with fiery redness, so as no horse nor man was able to tread on them, and the demolition had stopp'd all the passage, so that no help could be applied."

NOT EVERYTHING is marked in such a way. Cheesefoot Head, near Winchester, is a great natural amphitheatre where Eisenhower addressed Allied troops before D-Day in 1944.

We found nothing to indicate the occasion and a call on the US Embassy indicated that it couldn't care less.

On the other hand, the little Sussex village of Northiam proudly records on its playing field gate posts that Churchill, Mackenzie King, Smuts and the PM of South Rhodesia there discussed proposed tactics for the invasion.

It's near another historic spot — Queen Elizabeth I died under an oak tree in the village main street in 1573.

THE CLEAR ASSURANCE of faith on many tombstones and memorials is encouraging.

In Hemel Hempstead a plaque mourns the loss of a midshipman off the coast of Africa in 1827.

His parents' consolation was that "He feared his God and knew his Savior".

St Helen's Bishopsgate has the epitaph of Major-General George Kellum who served his country under William the Third ("of glorious memory") and the Victorious John, Duke of Marlborough.

Letters to the Seven Churches

SALUTATION (V.7)

The writer of the letter is "the True One"; and Christ says the Philadelphian church "observed My commands, and have not disowned My Name" (V.8).

They confessed the truth, whereas the church's enemies are they "who claim to be Jews but are lying frauds" (V.9).

The writer of the letter is "The Holy One", and the Philadelphian church members are holy people Christ says who "are My beloved people" (V.9), who kept His word with endurance.

COMMENDATION (Vv. 8-10)

There is neither rebuke nor warning from the Lord for this church but simply commendation.

The church was alive, obedient and loyal. Philadelphia suffered from frequent earthquakes, so it had only a small population, therefore the church was weak.

Christ knew the church had little power being weak in numbers and wealth, but it was loyal.

There is no hint of persecution from pagan authorities, nor of heresies within the church — Jews caused the trouble in Philadelphia.

There was a Jewish Nationalist Party in every city where a party of Jews settled. Such a party existed in every one of the Seven Cities, opposing, hating and annoying the Jewish Christians and the whole church in the city.

In Philadelphia (and in Smyrna) the Jews for some reason were especially influential probably because of their numbers and wealth; hence the weakness and poverty of the Christian church in these two Churches.

Christ indicates the Jews of the city are not worthy to be called Jews, and as in Smyrna they are designated "the synagogue of Satan".

EXHORTATION (Vv. 8, 11)
The "door of faith" which God opened to the Gentiles (Acts 14:27) through the preaching of Paul and Barnabas shall never be shut. (cf. 1 Cr. 16:9, 2 Cr. 12:2, Col. 4:3).

Christ promised "an open door" for the proclamation of the Gospel.

The Philadelphian church had a wonderful opportunity for missionary work. The city situated in a valley, on an important road running from the harbour of Smyrna to Phrygia and the countries to the east.

Philadelphia was founded with the intention of being a centre for the spread of Greek language and culture in Lydia and Phrygia. From the beginning it was a successful missionary city.

As the city was placed at that point on the road where the road ascended by a difficult pass to the high central plateau of Phrygia, it could be said that it was the keeper of the gateway to the plateau, it held the key and guarded the door.

Philadelphia — The Church with Opportunity — a wonderful opportunity to preach the Gospel — in spite of Jewish scoffers and accusers (V.9). We are not told the Church used the opportunity, but it is clearly implied.

Philadelphia was not alone in this regard among the

FOR ALL THE CONCERN shown in some towns and villages, the Reformation might just as well not have happened.

A most co-operative town clerk in Lewes in Sussex took us to the cellar where 17 Protestant martyrs were held before being burned in the centre of the street outside.

He seemed rather surprised that anyone was interested, even though a commemorative service was held each year.

Brentwood, Essex, has an obelisk about 15 feet high to mark the martyrdom of 19-year-old William Hunter who was condemned to death for "maintaining his right to search the Scriptures, and in all matters of faith and practice to follow their sole guidance".

The inscription urges the reader to "learn from his example to value the privilege of an open bible and be careful to maintain it".

Enquiries at the local court house failed to establish the whereabouts of the spot, and I recognised it from an old newspaper photograph in my files.

The base was partly obscured by builders' rubble from a neighbouring construction site.

SYNODS AND SYNODSMEN have been around longer than most of us realise.

A stone slab near Hertford Castle marks the spot where the first General Synod of the English Church was held on September 24, 673 AD. It was chaired by the seventh archbishop of Canterbury — Theodore of Tarsus, and six other bishops attended.

Some query the accuracy of the claim, but old synodsmen do fade away, and none survives to verify the facts.

Fancy! Over 1300 years of synod, and the country's still pagan.

PS. Here's hoping that Sydney's Synod won't be a monumental flop this year. Why this year? Well...

Cathedrals "service stations for community"

DEAN'S REPLY TO "DEAD MONUMENTS"

The Dean of Sydney, Dean Lance Shilton, has criticised a statement made recently in Melbourne by Dr John Vincent, of Britain, founder and head of Sheffield Urban Theology Unit.

Dr Vincent said that cathedrals were dead monuments and should be turned into libraries, swimming baths, bowling alleys or flats.

Dean Shilton said at St Andrew's Cathedral, Sydney on the following Sunday:

"Cathedrals in Australia and in Britain are not stuck in the mud but are very much alive and kicking. "In recent years they have become vital centres of communication within their cities providing inspiration for practical service to people in need and relevant topical comments on current controversies to keep the community on its toes."

"Dr Vincent's statements, as reported, sound like those of a person ignorant of all the facts, or prejudiced in his judgement or superficially sensational in his comments."

"I am realistic enough to believe that Christianity has not been oppressed to the point it has in Communist-controlled countries where churches are being turned into libraries and museums."

"Cathedrals are lively centres of reconciliation, communication and experimentation."

"These massive structures, symbolising the majesty of God, his transcendence and His sovereignty, no longer provide shelter for a holy huddle of the faithful few."

"They are becoming service stations for the Diocese and the community, meeting places for Christian celebrations in the midst of the dull secularism of our modern society, and the place of proclamation where casual callers or curious sightseers may learn how to become committed Christians."

"St Andrew's Cathedral, Sydney, open seven days a week, with an annual attendance of a quarter of a million adults and children, will have expanding opportunities for effective communication after the opening of Sydney Square by the Archbishop of Sydney and the Lord Mayor of Sydney on Thursday, September 23."

"Many of the cathedral's activities will come out from behind the ancient gothic walls into the modern Sydney square with music, drama, exhibitions, celebrations and services to make friendly contact with the people in the street and invite them to come in and make themselves at home."

Dean Shilton... I am realistic enough to believe that Christianity has not been oppressed to the point it has in Communist countries — where churches are being turned into libraries and museums.

Primates Consultation examines role of mission in Australia

The second Primate's Consultation, meeting in Melbourne September 7-8, 1976, agreed to recommend that the Anglican Church of Australia should give close attention in the years 1977-81 to defining and committing itself to mission within Australia.

The Primate, the Most Rev Frak Woods, called to the Consultation eighteen persons representing all sections of General Synod, its Standing Committee, its Board, Commissions and Committees.

Advance papers were prepared by the Primate (on Ecumenical Relationships), by Bishop C. A. Warren (on the role of Standing Committee), by Archbishop G. T. Sambell (on Projections for the future), by Bishop G. B. Muston (on Partners in Mission) and the Rev A. C. Nichols (on Communicating within the National Church).

Meeting in the Melbourne diocesan retreat house at Cheltenham, the eighteen invited persons discussed and debated issues raised in the advance papers. Most were present at the first Primate's Consultation in Canberra in September, 1975.

Those present were: the Primate (chairman), Bishops C. A. Warren, M. Thomas, G. B. Muston, J. Grant, J. Grindrod, G. Delbridge, D. Garnsey, Mother Faith CHN, Deaconess M. Rodgers, the Rev Doug Brown SSM, The Revs P. J. Hollingsworth, R. Butters, A. Baxter, T. Hayman, M. Betteridge, A. C. Nichols, and Mr J. G. Denton.

Issues debated included: • Whether the Standing Committee of General Synod could take initiative and leadership in the Church's mission; • How a "Partners in Mission" consultation or series of consultations could permeate the Australian Church; • Whether a General Synod office should be located in Canberra because it is the national capital;

• How a communications flow around the national church can be improved;

• To what extent resources and skills in the Church can be best exploited to develop the work of General Synod Commissions such as Social Responsibilities and International Affairs;

• The possibility of regional conferences prior to the General Synod to discuss matters of principle which will be discussed at the Synod;

• The nature of conciliar fellowship as expounded by the World Council of Churches, and relationships with such denominations as the United Church.

It was reported to the Consultation that a "Partners in Mission" consultation was being planned for Australia by the Missionary and Ecumenical Council. It will probably be held early 1978, and will draw on understandings gained from the Anglican Consultative Council held in Trinidad earlier this year. Such provincial consultations have been held throughout the Anglican Communion. This consultation, in the opinion of Consultation Members was designed to clarify the nature of the mission facing the Australian Church, and to offer goals for the years 1977-81 for General Synod and the whole of the Church.

A number of recommendations were drawn up for the Standing Committee of General Synod and for the Missionary and Ecumenical Council. These will be considered at their next meetings in October, 1976 and February, 1977 respectively.

Mr Barry Sinclair, chairman of the Arrangements Committee for the Hyde Park "Family Celebration" on Sunday, October 10, reported that planning was well under way and at least 10,000 people would give an address, supported by other civic and church leaders.

These addresses would be followed by the "Call to the Nation" and march through the city streets to the Domain.

Mr Sinclair said: "The entertainment includes the happiest phases — the condition of wonder. The love of mystery is an important part in all our make-up. It is part of the delight of life for most of us. To live without it is to be robbed of a great sense of happiness."

"Human happiness is not just made up of material things. All of us need some inner quality to reach the fulfilment of happiness of which we are capable."

"Sex is no longer a secret thing, which in some ways is good", said Dame Enid, "but sex is no longer a secret stripped of dignity."

The Lyons family of 90 includes 48 grandchildren and 30 great grandchildren.

Dame Enid recalls: "When we first married, I asked a good friend to pray we would be blessed with a family. Four years and four children later I chased all over the countryside looking for him to ask him to stop praying."

Dame Enid has had three books published: "So We Take Comfort", "The Old Haggis", and "Among the Carrion Crows"; and is researching her fourth, her memoirs.

The New England Girls' School, (NEGS) Armidale, about 1900. The School's founder, Miss Florence Green is on the verandah, near the entrance of "Akaroa", the first building erected for the school, around 1895.

The Synod of the Diocese of Armidale last May passed a resolution requesting that Diocesan Council "promote to the 1978 Synod" an ordinance providing for the independent incorporation of the New England Girls' School (NEGS) exclusively as a girls' school in the secondary department, a report from NEGS said this week.

"This resolution should therefore dispel rumours and speculation that NEGS and TAS (The Armidale School — for boys) will amalgamate.

"NEGS is in a strong financial position, and during its 81 years of providing education for girls in isolated areas, has never been in danger of closing.

"On the contrary, thanks to the astute financial management of its council, (and in particular of Canon Dickens, Messrs H. H. Cordingley and L. P. Dutton), it has weathered two world wars and the great depression, as well as financially aiding TAS and the Diocese."

Mr Cordingley is the great-uncle of the present honorary treasurer of the school council, Mrs Sylvia Grigg, who is both an old girl and a chartered accountant.

Miss Florence Green founded NEGS in 1895 and until 1907 ran it as a private venture school.

1907 to join her brother (Bishop Green) on an overseas tour, she sold it to the Diocese.

For the next 68 years NEGS was administered by the Diocese as a diocesan school.

The link was forged the more strongly through Clive Dickens who was for nearly 40 years both secretary of the school council and diocesan registrar — from 1913 to 1951 and because the school's books were (for most of the 68 years) written up in the registry office.

At the end of 1974, however, the nexus with the diocese was broken and for the first time in its history the school has a full-time bursar — Mr Bert Dixon, A.A.S.A.

Its administrative centre is now situated in "Akaroa" (pictured above), the first building erected by Miss Green on the four acres she purchased in 1895.

Muggeridge to promote Festival

Mr Muggeridge

"Those who watched the brilliance of Malcolm Muggeridge in his successful encounter with Norman Gunston on ABC television recently will look forward to seeing and hearing Mr Muggeridge in person during his visit to Australia in October."

The Australian Festival of Light said in a report this week.

Parking would be at a premium in the vicinity of Hyde Park and the NSW Police had suggested that interested people from various groups in Sydney suburbs should together arrange their own bus group and so reduce the expected heavy traffic load.

Special areas for buses would be set aside to allow the shortest possible walk to Hyde Park.

"Mrs Kitty Muggeridge will be assured of a warm welcome by women representing community groups and all Christian churches, when she visits Sydney in October with her husband Malcolm, the famous author and journalist," the Festival of Light said.

A women's coffee morning would be held at the Menzies Hotel on Saturday, October 9. (Entry was restricted to those receiving invitations.)

Mrs Muggeridge, who has been married for 49 years and describes herself as a "wife, mother and proud grandmother of nine young Christians," would speak about the family and its indispensability, especially in a society like ours.

Mrs Muggeridge is herself a writer and collaborated in producing a book about her aunt, Beatrice Webb.

State Governor is patron of Family Celebration

One of the most unique events in our recent national history will occur on Sunday, 10th October at 2 pm in Sydney's Hyde Park, when thousands of Australians share in a "Family Celebration" and renewed "Call to the Nation".

It will be the first time a mass citizens' rally has been held which is not a protest against any particular social or moral issue.

It is not a wowers' rally, but simply a positive celebration of family life.

It is a sincere attempt to get people of goodwill to discover and share in what we all hold in common.

The "Family Celebration" under the patronage of the Governor of NSW, Sir Roden Cutler, VC, will incorporate a renewed Call to the Nation as part of the ongoing positive campaign by the Festival of Light and other positive community organisations to mobilise wholesome public opinion.

The main guest speaker will be Malcolm Muggeridge, noted author, journalist and broadcaster — a genuine multi-media personality. Mr Muggeridge has summed up the choices facing our western civilisation in these striking terms: "So, without God, we were left with a choice of megalomania or erotomania; the clenched fist or the phallus, Nietzsche or Sade, Hitler or D. H. Lawrence."

Various community leaders will also share in the "Family Celebration", such as James Cardinal Freeman, who will develop the theme of "life" — "recognising the dignity of all men and women and the sanctity of life as the gift of God, the Creator."

The NSW Minister of Health, the Hon Kevin Stewart, MLA, will speak on the theme of the "family" — "acknowledging the family as the basic and natural unit of society, entitled to the support and protection of society and the state", in accordance with the United Nations Declaration.

Dame Monica Gallagher, NSW President of the Catholic Women's League, will speak on the positive aspects of womanhood and motherhood.

An atmosphere of joyful celebration under the chairmanship of the Hon Milton Morris, MLA, will be created by filling the sky with thousands of birds and coloured balloons, together with bright music of youthful folk groups.

Thousands of colourful banners and posters will decorate the park on various positive themes — "The Family that prays and plays together, stays together."

An exciting backdrop will be provided by the largest known Australian flag in existence — 30ft by 15ft!

Three national songs will be sung during the Celebration — "Advance Australia Fair", "God Save the Queen" and "God Bless Australia" to the tune of Waltzing Matilda.

Cathedral School opened

Over 1700 people on Sunday, September 19th, overflowed from St Andrew's Cathedral into the adjacent Chapter House at the Service to mark the entry into St Andrew's House, the new location for the 91 years old St Andrew's Cathedral School.

New Bishop for Armidale

Archdeacon Peter Chiswell, Vicar of Gunnedah and Administrator of the Diocese of Armidale was last Monday elected Bishop of Armidale at a special Synod at Tamworth.

Archdeacon Chiswell studied at Moore Theological College. He holds the Bachelor of Economics Degree from Melbourne University, Bachelor of Divinity from London University, as well as the ThL.

He became vicar at Gunnedah in 1968 and a canon of St Peter's Cathedral in 1970.

His election took place after three meetings of the Diocesan Synod. The earlier meetings were deadlocked and the procedures were changed for the last meeting to allow for preferential voting.

The Bishop elect is 42 years old, married and has three children.

At the conclusion of the Service in the Cathedral while the "Te Deum" was being sung by the outstanding Cathedral Choir, the Archbishop, Sir Marcus Loane was escorted by Dean Lance Shilton, Chairman of the School Council, the Chaplain of the School, the Reverend Alex Abbotsmith and the Senior Lay Canon, Mr T. A. B. Dakin and the School Captain, Marcus Perks, as well as Bishop A. J. Dain and Bishop J. K. Reid, outside the Cathedral, across Sydney Square to the entrance of the School.

EDITORIAL

October could be an important month for the future of Australia. A series of meetings (sponsored by the Festival of Light), media appearances and personal interviews by Malcolm Muggeridge hold out the prospect of widespread community discussion of fundamental moral questions.

Since becoming a Christian Malcolm Muggeridge has turned his considerable analytical and literary skills to the exposure of the deep-seated problems facing western society and its capacity for self destruction by internal decay. In homes, offices, factories, clubs, schools and churches, opportunities will present themselves for Christians to put before ordinary people the biblical claims of holy and righteous living.

Coinciding with Muggeridge's visit will be a Call to the Nation. This will be a document signed by leading citizens, which will call on Australians to turn back from the selfish slide of hedonism and embrace values and actions that express a commitment to what is good, what is holy, what is beautiful.

If these public meetings and The Call to the Nation do succeed in focusing public attention on such matters, it will be a wonderful opportunity to advocate the Christian way of life, which is the best way of life for all men.

To embark on a campaign such as The Festival of Light is full of dangers. Of necessity it will involve conflict where political allegiances are strained. This is not a matter of choice, but a regrettable fact of life, since the decisions have of politicians such a direct effect on community standards. Furthermore, such a campaign involves conflict with the more disreputable elements of society, bringing with it the constant threat of intimidation, slander and ridicule. The brunt of this pressure has been born personally by the director of FOL, the Rev Fred Nile. He has been prepared to enter into debate and confrontation with people who are committed to the furtherance of every kind of evil and who see their vested interests threatened by FOL's attacks. This has involved a high degree of courage and dedication. Christians who themselves are unwilling or unable to enter into these battles, could express their support into through their prayers and donations.

It is often alleged that campaigns such as the FOL are too narrow. "Why don't they direct their energies to the wider questions of social justice, poverty and welfare?" Of course the same criticism could be turned the other way, why don't the voluntary welfare agencies, etc, take an interest in the associated moral questions that often give rise to welfare problems? Clearly, specialising in one area does not imply lack of concern for the other. But unless some people concentrate their energies, the overall impact will be too weak to bring about any change.

It is worth remembering that the Bible expresses an interest in righteousness and justice. Both are facets of the same thing. The campaigns for social justice without a commitment to personal righteousness will soon degenerate into bureaucratic programs hardly touching the real needs. Commitment to personal righteousness without concern for its social outworkings would be irrelevant.

We urge all readers to throw their support behind both the Muggeridge meetings and The Call to the Nation. By these and other steps we can help to make this land a better place in which to live.

In homes, offices, factories, clubs, schools and churches, opportunities will present themselves for Christians to put before ordinary people the biblical claims of holy and righteous living.

Coinciding with Muggeridge's visit will be a Call to the Nation. This will be a document signed by leading citizens, which will call on Australians to turn back from the selfish slide of hedonism and embrace values and actions that express a commitment to what is good, what is holy, what is beautiful.

If these public meetings and The Call to the Nation do succeed in focusing public attention on such matters, it
