The Ethics & Economics of the Catholic Book Industry

The Rights and Duties of Catholic Professionals

During the temporary return to Catholicism in England in the reign of Mary Tudor, a royal decree in 1556 established the Stationers' Company, made up of leading publishers in London. Its primary purpose was to "check...the spread of the Protestant Reformation by concentrating the whole printing business in the hands of the members of that company."¹ Although this decree was changed by subsequent laws, the temporary leadership of a Catholic monarch served to illustrate the united effort of Catholic publishers to work together for the preservation of the true Faith. In more recent times, however, with the increasing secularization of modern governments, it was no longer governments but the Church alone which provided for the unity of Catholic publishing, and worked to unite Catholics in all the professions in a common effort to uphold the rights of the Church and of citizens.

Catholic Professionals in Modern Secular Societies

Catholic historian Thomas E. Woods, Jr. provides a perspective on how Catholics responded to modern threats to the Faith, this time not in England, which had a Catholic government before the Reformation, but in the United States. Although the United States was never a Catholic nation, its Catholic citizens have a history of organized action to influence temporal society. Writing about the so-called Progressive Era in the United States in the early twentieth century, Thomas Woods analyzes the efforts of progressives to secularize culture, through the government and through public education, by creating a secular civil religion to replace Christianity, which for Catholics would signify the elimination of the Church's influence in society. Not only did Catholics in the United States respond very decisively by refuting the false principles behind this movement, but they also began to establish numerous Catholic professional associations, through which Catholics exerted their presence in society by extending the influence of the Church beyond the parishes and other institutions of the Church into a variety of other social organizations.²

These events were taking place in the United States during the years marked by the apparitions of Our Lady of Fatima in 1917. Our Lady had prophesied that Russia would spread its errors throughout the world if mankind did not heed Her requests. Western nations were not immune to the influence of these errors, and some of them had even contributed to the antecedents leading to the Russian Revolution. The West had given rise to Protestantism in 1517, and to the birth of Freemasonry in 1717. But insofar as the West was the birthplace of Christian Civilization in the Middle Ages, it had produced social and political institutions within which Catholics could work to defend the rights of the Church. Although the United States was not without the influence of Freemasonry in its founding, the new nation nevertheless received support from the Catholic nations of France and Spain – and from Catholics in Maryland, who defended their country because independence brought them the freedom to practice their religion in the face of persecution by the Protestant Church of England.³

Concluding his analysis of the role of American Catholics in a predominantly non-Catholic society as it developed during the Progressive Era, Thomas Woods states: "What at times was an institutional isolation did not indicate a lack of concern with the nation as a whole; on the contrary, Catholics supposed that it was only through a robust Catholic culture that they could truly serve their country."

What was happening in the United States, however, was simply a manifestation of a universal trend under the guidance of the popes during the early twentieth century. To understand these events, we must turn to moral principles taught by St. Thomas Aquinas.

St. Thomas Aquinas and Business Professionals

With the development of modern technology – a prime example of which was the printing press – the growth of mass production affected the crafts and trades in such a way as to give rise to new social classes. As the popes responded by promoting harmony and cooperation between labor and capital, there also arose the desire for this mutual cooperation to be applied within the various professions, with political structures at times being promoted to achieve this objective.

Prior to these modern developments, St. Thomas Aquinas had taught the general moral principles, by raising questions regarding the duties of professionals to provide services to other members of society, and also regarding the right to receive a just payment for their services. While referring to services in general provided by a variety of professions, St. Thomas explicitly mentioned two by name, those of lawyers and doctors.⁴ The reason for St. Thomas's choice seems sufficiently clear. Whereas the farmer, a primary contributor to society because he provides food for the body – a subject which St. Thomas treats elsewhere⁵ – the medical doctor provides for the human body in another way, by caring for its health. The lawyer, on the other hand, as a specialist in the laws that govern civil society, provides services relating to its moral guidance – if the lawyer himself is truly dedicated to the principles of justice, and if the civil laws conform to the moral law.

It is in the context of the principles of justice, therefore, that St. Thomas asks whether lawyers, doctors and other professionals have a right to be paid for their services. Because of the prominent roles played by these two professionals, the doctors and the lawyers, a specific value is often attached to their services in modern societies. In the case of farming, however, once the predominant occupation in society, compensation for its services in modern times has often been left to the play of market forces, and to government intervention. In the midst of these modern developments, as mentioned above, Mary Tudor in England gave to Catholic publishers – a new profession due to the invention of the printing press – a position of leadership in society, insofar as they were entrusted with the propagation and defense of the Catholic Faith.

The Role of Catholic Professionals Today

Whereas our modern cultures assign a certain value to the legal and medical professions, with both of these latter being at the center of contemporary political debate about health care, Catholic publishers and booksellers lost their leadership status politically, which had been granted to their predecessors for a short time by Mary Tudor. No longer a privileged profession, Catholic publishing remains subject instead to market forces, and ultimately to the discretion of fellow Catholics who choose to support it in order to promote the Faith.

At the same time that modern society became increasingly secularized, the moral authority of the Church was by that very fact rejected, resulting in two consecutive developments analyzed by Juan Donoso Cortés (1809-1853) in Catholicism, Liberalism and Socialism.⁶ The first was that of liberalism, which emphasized liberty apart from duty and moral responsibility, leading to the breakdown of the traditional order within society. The second was socialism, which, under the guise of correcting the effects of this moral decline, demanded increased power of government to remedy the abuses, giving government control over all of a nation's wealth, thereby depriving both the Church and the family of their just material resources to fulfill their respective missions within society.

The Church responded to these modern social evils with an elaboration of Catholic social doctrine, through papal encyclicals and other moral and doctrinal pronouncements. And in addition to the teaching of the popes, other Catholic leaders, both ecclesiastical and lay, developed and applied the Church's unchanging social principles to the new circumstances, the "rerum novarum" referred to by Leo XIII in his encyclical carrying that name.

In the context of these developments and the application of Catholic social doctrine, various Catholic leaders focused their attention on the multiple professions that constitute the institutions and structures making up the social and economic life of society. Catholics could not always control the leadership of their governments, but they could organize their occupational and professional activities in such a way as to make the Catholic sectors of society a powerful social force, influencing and even guiding society as a whole. This Catholic endeavor manifests the marvelous role that the Church plays within society, not only through her strictly ecclesiastical institutions, but also through lay and professional associations as well – the Church's vanguard in bringing the Faith to those outside the Church, and introducing the principles of a truly just social order into society.

Pope St. Pius X explained these principles in a most profound way in his 1905 encyclical Il Fermo Proposito, stating the fundamental principles of the lay apostolate through Catholic Action, in union with the hierarchy, so that it represented an extension of the work of the Church as a whole through all of the vocations and states of life within the Church. It was in this Catholic environment that there arose various Catholic professional associations in the United States in the early twentieth century, as mentioned above. And it was these ideals that inspired the work of PCP when we began our apostolate in the distribution of Catholic books more than three decades ago.

How PCP Has Been Sustained by Its Customers and Benefactors

Catholic professional associations in modern times find their model in the medieval Catholic guilds, through which the members of each profession worked together for the common good of all their colleagues in the various trades and professions. PCP sought to imitate this ideal by striving to work together with other Catholic publishers and booksellers, in a spirit of collaboration rather than primarily competition. Other Catholics have proposed similar ideals in recent times, and in the English-speaking world a form of this has gone under the name of a social philosophy called distributism, which is associated with three prominent English Catholic writers – Hilaire Belloc, G. K. Chesterton and Father Vincent McNabb, O.P. However, the philosophy of distributism has been applied in morally inconsistent ways, a fact that calls for a critical evaluation of its principles.

Reacting to an exaggerated concentration of wealth in the hands of a small minority, which is characteristic of modern politics and economics, the distributists advocate for more members of society to become property owners. A recent article in defense of this policy was written by Joseph Pearce under the title "Turning Employees into Business Owners."⁷ Describing primarily the efforts of Washington State Catholic businessman Gellert Dornay, Joseph Pearce offers the practical application of an ideal – that of a business employer who makes his employees joint owners of his business. However, because of the limitations of his brief account, Joseph Pearce's article leaves open the field of discussion to an examination of other formulations and examples, those where distributism does not appear to have been applied in a way consistent with Catholic social doctrine.

PCP's efforts to enter into collaboration with three other Catholic publishers – two of which have a history of advocating for distributism – resulted in the exact opposite of a wider distribution of property ownership. For the printing of books that were financed by PCP were shared through a distribution network with these other publishers, but without PCP's being reimbursed for the total cost of the printing, and with all the profits going to the other publishers, and none to PCP.

This particular application of the ideals of distributism convinced PCP that such a Catholic social philosophy, as currently advocated, was lacking an adequate foundation in Catholic social principles among some of its promoters. The financial harm brought to PCP as a result of this experience almost put us out of operation. However, while losing a large part of our inventory as a result, we still had our customers and benefactors behind us, and their loyalty and support during our financial crisis enabled us to continue. This taught PCP an important lesson – the fact that some of our financial assets could be slowly rebuilt, because we had customers who continued to buy books that still remained in our inventory; and generous donors who made charitable contributions to supplement our income, since revenues from sales were insufficient to sustain us. In addition to this support, there were also the prayers and words of encouragement that cannot be calculated in financial terms, but which added immeasurably to enabling us to continue our work.

Following these reflections we are sharing a letter that we received more than two decades ago from a Dominican sister, and another that we received very recently from a priest. Both of these letters have special significance because they come from those who consecrated their lives to the Church in an ecclesiastical vocation. PCP therefore continues to exist because of the spiritual and financial support that we have received from others, and in such a way that we think it justifiable to apply words of St. Paul to those who have provided us with this encouragement and support: “...the sincere generosity of your contributions . . . because of the excellent grace God has given you. Thanks be to God for this unspeakable gift!” (2 Cor.: 9:14-15).

Letters to Preserving Christian Publications

St. Eusebius of Vercalli

Gentlemen:

Enclosed is a check...in payment for two books

Thank you very much. It is always a pleasure to receive your wonderful catalog. It is a delight to receive gift money which I can use toward your wonderful Catholic books. Where else can we obtain such orthodox teaching? It is too bad the upcoming generation of our young Sisters does not appreciate the treasures of the past. The Benedictines preserved the classics of antiquity during the Dark Ages, and you are doing the same for the present-day Church. May God reward you for your efforts to bring real Catholic books to us and preserve our Catholic heritage.

Sincerely yours,
Sister Marie Virginia, O.P.

Dear John,

Over the years I have often wondered how PCP functioned. Now, having read the touching letter at the beginning of your latest newsletter, I understand. For Brian to lose two children and his wife and suffer his own poor health is beyond comprehension – but faith carries him – and you – on. Thank you so much for sharing this witness to faith with those of us who would never have known otherwise. And thanks for the labor you put into preserving traditional Catholic books – I have several myself and use your breviary every day. I also enjoyed the article on the Fatima Secret and 1960.

God bless you.

Father Kenneth Myers

ORDERING INFORMATION

Each book is identified by name, author, year published, number of pages (p) and price. "IL" stands for illustrated and "pb" for paperback where applicable. Condition of each book is identified as follows: (E) Excellent, (VG) Very Good, (G) Good, (F) Fair, (P) Poor. "Bi" and "Pg" refer to binding and pages respectively.

Because we specialize in used and out-of-print books, we frequently have only one or two copies of many of our titles. Refunds are made for books that are no longer available. Books reserved by telephone are held for our customers, and then are mailed as soon as possible after receipt of payment. Books for which payment has not been received after fifteen days are made available for sale to other customers.

Books in Print: In addition to our used books we also offer a selection of new books, primarily reprints of formerly out-of-print works. New books are listed in our section "Books in Print." Discounts on quantity orders (applies only to books in print, not to used and out-of-print books) are available: 10% on orders of three or more copies, 20% for ten or more. Larger discounts are available to bookstores.

Printed Catalog & Web Site: Our printed catalog offers many of our newly acquired titles, while our web site contains much of the cataloged inventory that does not appear in the most recent printed catalog. We invite you to examine each of these inventory lists – the printed catalog because it offers the most recent acquisitions, and the web site because of its more extensive listing of approximately 5,000 titles.

Visit the PCP, Inc. Internet web site at www.pcpbooks.net for our inventory of approximately 5,000 titles.

Communion in the Hand: Documents & History

by Bishop Juan Rodolfo Laise

Excerpt from Part IV, Conclusions:

... the new practice has not been desired by the Holy See . . . but rather has only been permitted due to the unyielding insistence of some episcopal conferences (especially in Protestant countries); and this only after a completely abusive introduction which was not possible to resist, in spite of the complaints and prohibitions from Rome.

Therefore the habitual reading of the document is false. According to this reading, in the face of the various petitions and the results of the consultation with the bishops, the pope decided to grant the practice of both rites to the episcopal conferences that requested it. In reality, the purpose of MD [Memoriale Domini] was not to be an instrument for the adoption of Communion in the hand but rather to maintain its prohibition. All of the reasons cited by the pope for this are of great weight. They have a solid basis and enjoy permanent validity as they confirm the concern for avoiding all that has the appearance of irreverence towards God in the Real Presence in the Eucharist. The introduction of this change is of enormous importance because, given that the treatment of the Eucharist is pedagogic, the lack of concern for the Particles does harm the doctrine. Communion on the tongue, on the other hand, is a sign of the real and substantial presence of the Lord and of the essential distinction between the common priesthood of the faithful and the ministerial priesthood.

Frequently one minimizes the danger of desecration, saying that it always existed. . . . With the Communion in the hand a miracle would be needed so that in each Communion some Particle not fall or remain in the hand of the faithful.

Essay on Catholicism, Liberalism, and Socialism

by Juan Donoso Cortés [1809-1853]

Excerpt from Part III, Chapter 3, "The Dogma of Solidarity —Contradictions of the Liberal School":

From which we see that the dogma of solidarity not only confers nobility upon man, but also dignity upon human nature. This is not the case with regard to the communist theory of solidarity, of which we shall presently speak. According to this theory, the solidarity of humanity does not mean the vast association of men who are united because they have but one and the same nature, but it means that humanity is a living and organic unity which absorbs all men, who in place of constituting it are only its instruments.

According to the Catholic dogma, the individuals are exalted to the same dignity as the species. Catholicism holds an equal and sublime level, without inclining to any undue elevation or depression. It does not ennoble human nature in order to humiliate man, but it desires that both man and humanity may be raised to divine heights. When I examine myself, and reflect upon what I am, and when I behold myself in communion with the first man and with the last of men, and when I consider the actions I perform and see them survive me, and become the cause in the course of their perpetual prolongation of acts multiplied upon acts, which, in their turn, are perpetually multiplied, even to the end of time; when I think that all these actions combined have in my act their origin, and that they will testify in my regard not only for what I do, but for what I have caused others to do, and that I shall accordingly be judged worthy either of reward or condemnation; when I meditate upon all these things, I can only prostrate myself before God and acknowledge that it is not given to me to understand or to measure the immensity of the dignity with which God has invested me. Who but God could thus raise all things to so elevated and perfectly just a standard? When man wishes to exalt any object, he does so only by depressing what he does not elevate. In religious spheres, he does not know how to raise himself without lowering God, nor does he know how to exalt God without debasing himself. In the political world, man does not know how to render homage to liberty without depriving authority of the respect and obedience due to it. In social life, he alternately either sacrifices society to the individual or the individual to society, forever fluctuating, as we have seen, between the communist despotism and Proudhonian anarchy. If he at times attempts to maintain a just equipoise everywhere by establishing a certain accord and justice in things, then the balance with which he would adjust them falls from his hand and is broken, as if there existed an irremediable disproportion between the weight of this balance and the weakness of man. It would seem as if God, when He gave to man dominion over the sciences, had withheld one alone which He destined to remain under His own sway and jurisdiction—the science of equilibrium [pp. 160-162].

Pope Leo XIII and the Prayer to St. Michael

by Kevin J. Symonds

"In his book Pope Leo XIII and the Prayer to St. Michael Mr. Kevin Symonds presents a very careful and competent historical research about the origin and the circumstances of the publication of the prayer to St. Michael...Furthermore he gives also a rich spiritual reflection on the Divine truth about the Holy Angels, the fallen angels and the reality and necessity of the spiritual battle. Mr. Symonds' book is indeed very relevant for our times. May this book become widespread and raise to many Catholics—especially the clergy—a new awareness of the necessity to use the spiritual means which God and His Church have given us in order to fight against the infiltration and attacks of the evil spirits."

The Influence of the Communist Party in New York State

("Russia will spread its errors. . . ." – Our Lady of Fatima)

School of Darkness

by Bella Dodd

An excerpt from Chapter Eight

In the city-wide 1937 elections in New York, the Party, which had helped establish the American Labor Party the year before, captured several important places within it. In city politics there was a steady elimination of differences between the major parties, and responsible leadership in the two old parties was disappearing. This led inevitably to the control of all parties by a small group around Fiorello LaGuardia, whose political heir was Vito Marcantonio. It was a personal dictatorship. Nominations were traded in the struggle for power, and the Community Party was not slow in insinuating itself into this struggle.

Those who say LaGuardia was a great mayor forget that he did more to break down the major political parties and party responsibility than any other person in New York State. The streets were clean, taxes were lower, graft was less obvious, but under LaGuardia political power was transferred from the people organized into political parties into the hands of groups exercising personal power. The real political power passed to the well-financed, well-organized unions of the CIO and of the left-wing A. F. of L. and to the organized national minority groups, Negro, Italian, Jewish, etc. These groups were used as political machines to get votes and their self-appointed leaders were rewarded with the spoils of office. This new pattern I saw repeated over and over again, and it drained both Republican and Democratic Parties.

I saw LaGuardia meet with the Communists. I saw him accept from Si Gerson and Israel Amter written withdrawal from a position to which they had been nominated and receive a certificate of substitution at the mayor's request. A half-hour later I heard him address the Social Democrat wing of the American Labor Party at the Hotel Claridge, and the first thing he did was excoriate the Communists. Communists were in the audience and not one of them seemed even to notice this humbug. Thus LaGuardia played with both wings of the Labor Party to his own advantage. Such were the politics to which the idealists were giving themselves [pp. 106-107].

Antonio Augusto Borelli Machado*

2017 64p paperback/pamphlet $8. #50083

On April 8, PCP's staff attended in Buffalo, New York the funeral of John Vennari, editor of Catholic Family News and collaborator with the Fatima apostolate of the late Father Nicholas Gruner. At the luncheon after the funeral we were seated at a table with some members of the staff of the Fatima Center, due to the friendship between Brian Pouliot's Canadian relatives and the Fatima Center staff. During the luncheon Mrs. Susan Vennari, John Vennari's wife, spoke to those in attendance, and referred to three "great laborers" whom her husband tried to emulate. One of those mentioned was the late John Cotter, the father-in-law of Brian Pouliot.

John Vennari and other collaborators of the Fatima Center worked zealously in promoting the message of Fatima, but not without controversy. A central aspect of that controversy manifested itself shortly after the funeral, when two of the pallbearers, Christopher Ferrara and Michael Matt, published an open letter addressed to President Donald Trump, opposing his missile strike in Syria on April 6. However, since both Russia and the United States are involved in the Syrian crisis, the position taken by Messrs. Matt and Ferrara leads to unresolved questions about the meaning of Our Lady of Fatima's specific reference to the errors of Russia.

We ourselves raised these very questions during conversations at the wake and at the luncheon with two influential collaborators of the Fatima Center. Sister Lúcia in her May 12, 1982 letter to Pope John Paul II stated that the Third Secret refers to the Second Secret, and specifically to Our Lady's warning about the spreading of the errors of Russia. PCP's booklet, Fatima and the Third Secret, has been revised and enlarged to address these questions more completely for this centennial year of Fatima. This new edition also includes the important interview of Brazilian Fatima scholar Dr. Antonio Augusto Borelli Machado, "Why Was the Third Secret of Fatima Not Released in 1960?" With its two new chapters and the interview of Antonio Borelli, it addresses the problems relating to the controversies regarding Fatima and the Third Secret, and with special reference to the errors of Russia.
