ABSTRACT.—A checklist of caridean and penaeoid shrimps known to date for the eastern tropical Pacific (ETP) is presented, and totals 227 species (39 penaeoids and 188 carideans). The list, based on the literature and the authors' unpublished data, includes northern and southern species that extend significantly into the ETP as well as species found only within the ETP. The range of each species within the ETP is provided, and its presence in other regions of the world is indicated.

Of the 227 species, 177 (about 80%) are endemic to the region. Among the non-endemics, 7 species occur worldwide; 19 species occur in the Indo-West Pacific, two of which occur also in the West Atlantic and one of which occurs also in the East Atlantic; eight species are found on both sides of the Atlantic; 16 species are found only in the western Atlantic; one species lives in the southern Atlantic; one species occurs in the Indian Ocean. The family Alpheidae is the most diverse, with 77 species, followed by the Palaemonidae, with 55 species.

RESUMEN.—Se presenta una lista de los camarones carideos y peneoideos conocidos hasta la fecha para el Pacífico este tropical (PET), incluyendo 227 especies (30 Penaeoidea y 188 Caridea). Esta lista, basada en la literatura y en informaciones no publicados por los autores, contiene las especies que se encuentran solamente en el PET así como las especies que se encuentran distribuidas al norte o al sur pero que extienden su distribución de manera significativa en el PET. Se proporcionan los límites de distribución de cada especie dentro del PET y se indica su eventual presencia en otras regiones del mundo.

Considerando las 227 especies conocidas para el PET, 177 (cerca del 80%) son endémicas de la región. Entre las especies no endémicas, 7 presentan una distribución mundial; 19 especies se encuentran en el Indo-Pacífico oeste, de los cuales dos se encuentran también en el Atlántico oeste y una en el Atlántico este; 8 especies se encuentran en ambos lados del Atlántico; 16 se encuentran solo en el Atlántico oeste; una especie vive en el Atlántico sur, y otra en el océano Índico. Con 77 especies, la familia Alpheidae es la más diversificada, seguida de la familia Palaemonidae con 55 especies.

INTRODUCTION

Caridean and/or penaeoid shrimps are present in virtually every habitat in marine or brackish waters. Carideans are most diverse in shallow tropical waters. Penaeoids are much less diverse and are usually associated with the continental shelf or slope.

Over the last 10 years, the caridean shrimp fauna of the eastern tropical Pacific (ETP) has been intensively studied. From 1970 to 1989, 52 new species were described from the ETP; of these, about 45 were added to the fauna of the region from 1980 to 1989. In contrast, the systematics of ETP penaeoids has been much more stable, with only two new species described from this region between 1970 and 1989. The shrimp fauna of waters deeper than 50 m is poorly known, with many species reported only from a few specimens or from collections made prior to 1900. See Wicksten (1989c) for an account of species deeper than 50 m.

The ETP encompasses diverse habitats: coral reefs, rocky cliffs, tidepools, boulder zones, beds of algae and sea grasses, mangroves, mud flats, intertidal and shallow subtidal sandy areas, and volcanic seeps in deeper areas. These habitats support a high number of shrimp species.

At present, 29 species of penaeoid and 188 species of caridean shrimps are reported from the ETP. The eastern Pacific stenopodidean shrimps are discussed by Goy (this volume). Among the penaeoids the family Penaeidae is most diverse, while among the carideans the Alpheidae and Palaemonidae achieve the greatest diversity. These families also predominate in other tropical areas. Interestingly, roughly similar numbers of species of penaeoids and carideans have been reported from the West Indies and the Gulf of Mexico: 37 species of penaeoids (Chace 1972, Roberts and Pequegnat 1970), 200 species of carideans (Chace 1972, Pequegnat 1970). In contrast, in the tropical Indo-Pacific region these groups are vastly more diverse. Banner and Banner (1982), for example, reported 78 species of Alpheus from Australia alone, and Chace (1985) cited 43 species of Pandalidae for the Philippines and central Indonesia.

We provide the following list in hopes that it will aid researchers trying to identify species and compare zoogeographic distributions.

METHODS

The list presented herein includes records compiled from the literature and our own notes through 1990. Records of carideans from western Colombia are based on specimens sent by Gabriel Ramos, Universidad del Valle. Only benthic species or those that usually live on the bottom are included. A checklist of the pelagic shrimps of the entire east Pacific was prepared by Hendrickx and Estrada-Navarrete (1989). Our list includes species from all depths. Although we emphasized marine species, the river shrimps (Macrobrachium spp.) are included because it is difficult to separate those occurring in brackish water from those occurring exclusively in fresh water. Species of the family Atyidae are excluded, as they inhabit primarily fresh water. The area covered extends from the central west coast of Baja California, Mexico (about 25° N), to northern Peru (about 7° S) and includes the entire Gulf of California.

In the list, we follow the conservative familial classification presented by Bowman and Abele (1982) rather than recent revisions by Bruce (1986) and Christoffersen (1987, 1989a, b). Although these newer systems have merit, they have not yet received widespread acceptance.

Many of the records in the checklist were derived from the accounts of the collections of the steamer Albatross from Mexico to the Galapagos (Faxon 1893, 1895), the work by Méndez (1981) on the shrimp of Peru, the works on carideans of the Gulf of California, benthic offshore decapods of the eastern Pacific, and shrimps of the Galapagos Islands by Wicksten (1983, 1989c, in press); and the account of Kim and Abele (1989) on the decapods of Panama. The citations of species descriptions included in these works do not appear in our literature cited but can be found easily by reference to these regional accounts. We include citations for ranges included neither in these works nor in any other systematic accounts.

Synonyms, citations of original descriptions, and further discussion of the species of the Alpheidae, Hippolytidae, Palaemonidae, and Pandalidae can be found in the works of Kim and Abele (1988), Wicksten (1989b, 1990) Holthuis (1951, 1952), and Hendrickx and Wicksten (1989). Pérez Farfante (1985) published an extensive account of the species of Sicyonia. The nomenclature of the Alpheidae is likely to change because of recognition of synonyms, lack of consensus on the taxonomy, and non-verification of species identifications of earlier studies. Aspects of the systematics of the genus Alpheus and related shrimps are presented by Ríos and Knowlton and Mills in this volume.

Species are grouped by family, with families alphabetized within the Dendrobranchiata and Caridea. Within each family, genera and species are in alphabetic order. We have not included undescribed or provisionally identified species.

We could not check all of the records for misidentifications, newer synonyms, or other problems. We consider eastern Pacific-Caribbean geminate pairs to belong to separate species, that is, Latreutes antiborealis is considered the eastern Pacific relative of L. parvulus from the warm-temperate Atlantic and Caribbean, Thor algicola is considered separate from T. manningi, etc. We have listed every species of Alpheus reported from the eastern Pacific regardless of possible synonyms or taxonomic changes because no one has reexamined specimens that were identified prior to the publication of the work of Kim and Abele (1988). We list subspecies of Synalpheus separately.

If the range was given in the original species description and has not been revised since, the source is the original citation. If the range has been mentioned by a later author, that author's citation is given at the end of the range. We attempted to be as precise as possible in describing ranges, but some authors gave locations such as "Gulf of California," in which case we list the range in quotation marks. Names of geographic features are given in English for consistency.

Many species in the checklist are known from isolated localities that may not appear on regional maps. We have attempted to describe the location as precisely as possible, but in some cases the names of the collection sites are known only to local people and cannot easily be traced. Maps of many collection sites appear in the accounts of the Allan Hancock Pacific Expeditions (Fraser 1943).

For species with ranges that extend beyond the eastern Pacific, we use the following abbreviations for general geographic distribution: W-ATL, West Atlantic; E-ATL, East Atlantic; ATL, East and West Atlantic; PAC, Pacific Ocean; I-PAC, Indo-Pacific; I, Indian Ocean; WW, world-wide (including circumtropical or cosmopolitan species).

RESULTS

In the following list, species are grouped within their respective families and numbered 1 to 227. Numbers of species in each family are summarized in Table 1.

The ETP penaeoid and caridean shrimps demonstrate a very high degree of endemism. Indeed, as many as 177 species (about 80%) are found exclusively in this region. The remaining 50 species are distributed as follows: worldwide, seven species; Indo-West Pacific, 19 species, including two species (Automate dolichognatha and Thor amboinensis) also found in the western Atlantic and one (Alpheus sulcatus) recorded in the east Atlantic; western and eastern Atlantic, eight species; west Atlantic only, 16 species (representing 32% of the non-endemics); one species (Pandalopsis ampla) also occurs in the southwest Atlantic and one species (Haliporus thetis) is also found in the eastern Indian Ocean (see Table 2).
