

A Guide to Pediatric Audiologists in Utah

Utah Department of Health
September 2009

Preface

This information was compiled from a statewide survey of licensed audiologists in July 2008 to serve as a resource for families, medical home providers, and newborn hearing screening programs. It should not be viewed as a complete resource directory or as an endorsement of any specific agency. Provider services were self-reported and not verified by the Utah Department of Health.

Individual agency billing policies apply to all services.

Abbreviations and Definitions

Auditory Brainstem Response – ABR, ASSR, BAER, BSER

Small probes are placed in your baby's ears. Soft clicking sounds are directed into the ear. A computer measures your baby's response to sound through electrodes placed on your baby's head. This test evaluates the ear, the auditory nerve, and the brainstem's response to sound. This test can only be done if the child is either asleep or very still. It often requires sedation.

Otoacoustic Emissions - OAE, DPOAE, TEOAE

Soft sounds are directed into the ear through a tiny earplug. A computer then measures the responses. The OAE measures sound waves (emissions) generated by the motion of the outer hair cells in the cochlea. A strong "emission" means the inner ear is functioning normally.

Visual Reinforcement Audiometry – VRA

These audiological (hearing) tests use the child's ability to localize (or search for) sounds to provide information about hearing sensitivity. Between 4 and 6 months of age, an infant should be able to look for the source of a sound if he hears it.

Tympanometry

A soft probe tip is placed in the ear canal. The movement of the eardrum and the pressure in the middle ear space is recorded. This test determines if there is fluid in the middle ear and if the middle ear bones are working properly.

Pure Tone Audiometry

Sounds of different frequency (tones) and loudness levels (intensity) are introduced to your child. Your child will indicate if he hears the tone, usually by raising his hand. The tones are presented either through earphones/inserts or through a vibrator placed behind the ear. This test will provide information about how your child hears different tones at different loudness levels and is ear specific.
