

CONFIDENTIAL

The Director of Central Intelligence
Washington, D.C. 20505

National Intelligence Council

NIC #06132-84
25 October 1984

MEMORANDUM FOR: Director of Central Intelligence
Deputy Director of Central Intelligence

THROUGH: Chairman, National Intelligence Council
Vice Chairman, National Intelligence Council

FROM: Fritz W. Ermarth
National Intelligence Officer for USSR

SUBJECT: Conference on US-Soviet Relations

1. On 18-19 October I attended a major conference on US-Soviet relations in Los Angeles. Secretary Shultz made an important policy speech to the participants, plus guest-dignitaries. Participants included most of the influential "policy relevant" Sovietologists.

2. While valuable and interesting, the conference was also disappointing in an important respect: With the exception of Dick Pipes, none of the participants articulated a clear image of how Soviet internal problems (economy, society, leadership) might make the USSR a tougher or perhaps even easier partner to deal with in the years ahead. Pipes characterized the USSR's alternative futures as war, collapse, or reform; the chances that reform will be pursued are better than usual; the US should on the whole hang tough as the best means to promote this. Although I happen to agree with Pipes, I tried to coax other participants to state their basic assumptions about the internal-external nexus by suggesting that perhaps modest changes of the Soviet national policy agenda might be in the offing, e.g., toward internal investment, away from military power building and power projection. But most experts did not respond.

3. The authoritative majority of the group was "liberal pragmatist" (a la Marshall Shulman - Bill Hyland). Their basic case was that the USSR is aggressive, paranoid, nasty and will remain so. But the main fault for bad US-Soviet relations really lies on the US Administration for treating them as such. The burden lies on the US to put out the welcome mat.

25X1

CONFIDENTIAL

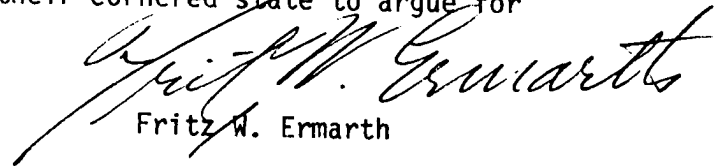

1

CONFIDENTIAL

4. I came away with the feeling that this very representative body of US private/academic specialists on the USSR has been left behind by larger developments inside the USSR and in the US-Soviet strategic competition.

5. Secretary Shultz's speech was an attempt to give a "conceptual" treatment of US policy to a high-brow audience at a very political moment. It was a model balancing act: The USSR is a nasty adversary and must be contained; on the other hand, we are willing to talk and will not engage in gratuitous linkage in the manner of Carter's post-Afghanistan moves. Most heard this as signalling moves by the Administration after November.

6. At Tab A is a list of participants. Tab B is the closing passage of Bill Hyland's very representative paper which interestingly exploits the notion that the Soviets may lash out from their cornered state to argue for more accommodating US policies.

Fritz W. Ermarth

Attachments: As stated

CONFIDENTIAL

2.

Conference on

U.S. SOVIET RELATIONS: THE NEXT PHASE
(October 18-19, 1984)

A

PARTICIPANTS

Hannes Adomeit, Stiftung Wissenschaft und Politik
Arthur Alexander, The Rand Corporation
Alex Alexiev, The Rand Corporation
Jeremy Azrael, State Department
Abe Becker, The Rand Corporation
Seweryn Bialer, Columbia University
Robert Blackwill, Harvard University
George Breslauer, University of California, Berkeley
Scott Bruckner, CSSIB fellow
Larry Caldwell, Occidental College
David Cattell, University of California, Los Angeles
Rosemarie Crisostomo, CSSIB fellow
Sharyl Cross, CSSIB fellow
Alexander Dallin, Stanford University
Lili Dzirkals, The Rand Corporation
Fritz Ermarth, Central Intelligence Agency
Lubov Fajfer-Wong, CSSIB fellow
Frank Fukuyama, The Rand Corporation
Harry Gelman, The Rand Corporation
G. Allen Greb, Institute on Global Conflict and Cooperation
Laura Holmgren, CSSIB fellow
Arnold Horelick, The Rand Corporation
William Hyland, Council on Foreign Relations
Michael Intriligator, University of California, Los Angeles
Ross Johnson, The Rand Corporation
Michael Klecheski, The Rand Corporation
Roman Kolkowicz, University of California, Los Angeles
Andrzej Korbonski, University of California, Los Angeles

- 2 -

Ben Lambeth, The Rand Corporation
Gail Lapidus, University of California, Berkeley
Robert Legvold, Columbia University
Edward Luck, United Nations Association of the United States of America
Jack Matlock, National Security Council
Fritz Mosher, The Carnegie Corporation
Joseph Nye, Harvard University
Ray Orbach, University of California, Los Angeles
Richard Pipes, Harvard University
Alan Platt, The Rand Corporation
William Potter, University of California, Los Angeles
Don Rice, The Rand Corporation
Hans Rogger, University of California, Los Angeles
Dennis Ross, Berkeley-Stanford Program on Soviet International Behavior
Brent Scowcroft, Henry Kissinger Associates
Marshall Shulman, Columbia University
Dmitri Simes, Carnegie Endowment
Helmut Sonnenfeldt, The Brookings Institute
Peter Staugard, CSSIB fellow
Strobe Talbott, Time, Inc
Vladimir Treml, University of California, Berkeley
John VanOudenaren, The Rand Corporation
Ted Warner, The Rand Corporation
Daniel Yankelovich, Yankelovich, Skelly & White
Charles Wolf, The Rand Corporation
Warren Zimmerman, Council on Foreign Relations/State Department

[REDACTED]

Quotation from paper by William G. Hyland, Council on Foreign Relations,
"The US and the USSR: Rebuilding Relations"

The Soviet strategic position is indeed declining. It is faced by a strategic encirclement: the US, Europe, China and Japan. It has made almost no progress in breaking up this coalition. It cannot bring itself to make the concessions that China demands; it cannot grant the territory that Japan wants back; it cannot impose its demands on the United States or split the US from West Europe. And so it faces stark choices. One is the choice that is being aired in a non-classified CIA memorandum -- the "breakout option." (The Wall Street Journal, September 17, 1984). It is not an idle view: indeed, that was one of several Soviet motives in Afghanistan. And that area along the USSR southern flank remains a potential vulnerability (especially Pakistan). But an alternative is to explore American terms for a modus vivendi. For the US this imposes a familiar dual obligation: to be prepared to resist Soviet advances and encroachments, but also to be prepared to negotiate on accommodation. Over the past five years, the US has put itself in a better position to carry out the containment side of its policy, but now it needs to organize the diplomatic side. If it does so with a policy of small steps, the result is likely to be a continuing stalemate. Indeed, the US might even inadvertently drive the USSR into a dangerous corner. But if the US can outline a broad basis for resuming a strategic dialogue, then it maximizes its chances of drawing the USSR into a safer relationship. And that is, after all, what American foreign policy is all about.

B